IRRESPONSIBLY FILTHY

THOSE who read the speeches of the Urban Councillors on the occasion of their annual debate on Tuesday will have come to the conclusion—if they have not already done so—that by and large Hong-kong people are irresponsibly filthy in their habits. Complaints were voiced about the deplorable state of many new buildings. Dr. Allison Bell referred to "stinking cesspits" in the central ventilation shafts. People just open the window and throw their garbage into it. The slightly less thoughtless, but equally irresponsible, leave it on the stairways. Quite rightly there are demands to have this state of affairs remedied.

It is unnecessary to have lived in Hongkong long to become acquainted with the attitude of the people to community cleanliness. Garbage is habitually thrown out of verandahs into many side streets. Gutters are used as public conveniences. Spitting is an ineradicable evil. Pots and pans are often cleaned in the streets. The accumulated filth from rooftop squatters pours down drain pipes into streets and gutters. And the smells are, not surprisingly, hideous and foul. Why we bother to feature the imperial dragon of China on our armorial bearings is a puzzle. It should be the colonial cockroach rampant.

GOVERNMENT has shown remarkable patience dealing with this problem. The question is whether it has been too lenient and whether film shows and "Miss Ping On" competitions coupled with inspection and supervision as at present carried out by the Urban Council are sufficient.

Part of the trouble admittedly is that some new buildings have no garbage chutes. It is difficult to know whether to blame the private architect or Government for their reluctance to insist on such a basically essential amenity. Surely it should be compulsory. And to underline the serious health problem that this filthy habit of dumping garbage constitutes why doesn't the Council make regular and frequent use of the powers Dr. P. F. Woo says it has? This would mean cleaning up the mess itself and handing the bill to the tenants who are turning these places into built-up middens.

Khrushchev's boast to Kremlin audience
OUR COLOSSAL SUPERIORITY

My husband set me on fire with petrol
WOMAN'S DYING DEPOSITIONS
Defence aspect of man's space flight emphasised

Signed with pen held between lips

Sydney, Apr. 14.

A dying woman made a mark with a pen held between her lips to sign depositions alleging her de facto husband had thrown petrol over her and set her alight, a magistrate's court was told today.

Maj. Yuri Gagarin, 27-year-old Soviet astronaut who successfully orbited the earth, holds his daughter, Yelena, 2, in this picture made available by Tass, Soviet photo-agency. There was no indication when the picture was made. The Gagarins have another daughter.—AP photo.

Moscow, Apr. 14.

Mr Nikita Khrushchev told a cheering Kremlin audience to-night that the space feat of Yuri Gagarin had given the Soviet Union's defences a "colossal superiority" over the West.

"What is the conclusion from this?" asked the Soviet Premier. "The conclusion is that this must not give predominance to any one or to any country."

"This must lead to even greater conviction on the part of all the people throughout the world that greater efforts must be directed to secure peace, to reach an agreement on disarmament."

Until such an agreement was reached, Mr Khrushchev added, "it is necessary to think of the defence of our country."

Mr Khrushchev said the important thing about Gagarin's feat from the Soviet standpoint "is that those who are sharpening their knives against us know that Yuri has been in space."

He continued: "And that he has seen everything. And now he knows everything—and if necessary he will fly again. And if his needs support he can take another course to fly with him and have an even better look around."

This remark brought down the house.

Mr Khrushchev proposed a toast to "the triumph of man, the reason and genius of man, who as a result of science and his genius has broken away from the earth and gone up into the cosmos."

"The time is not far off when inter-planetary travel will probably be made possible," the Premier said.—AP.

GAGARIN LANDED BY PARACHUTE

Moscow, Apr. 14.

Moscow Radio suggested today that spaceman Yuri Gagarin left his capsule in the air and completed his trip by parachuting to the ground.

The broadcast quoted Soviet scientist Nikolai Guravsky as saying: "The astronaut came down smoothly in a glade near a field. Landing on his feet, even without tumbling, he walked up to the people who saw him first."

Tass, quoting the newspapers Komsomolskaya Pravda and Soviet Russia, added that a tractor driver on a collective farm, Ivan Rudenko, was working near his field station when he saw the landing.

"Rudenko... saw well the landing of the space ship. He said the cosmonaut parachuted down close to where he was. 'My comrades and I ran out to meet him,' Rudenko said. 'We saw a very calm and absolutely unhurt man who had a wristwatch on one hand and a small mirror on the sleeve of his flying suit on the other hand.'—AP.

BELGIUM TO RENEW TIES WITH CONGO

Brussels, Apr. 14.

Restoration of diplomatic relations between Belgium and the Congo was expected shortly, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today.

The Belgian news agency Belga, quoting well informed sources in Leopoldville, said a Congolese delegation will leave for Brussels next Tuesday.

The sources said the resumption would have to be followed by at least partial application of the treaty of technical, financial and military assistance between Belgium and the Congo.

They added that it was believed in Leopoldville that the financial assistance, should be direct from Government to Government and not through the United Nations.—Reuters.

WARM U.S. FAREWELL FOR SIR WINSTON

New York, Apr. 14.

A smiling Sir Winston Churchill bade cheering Americans goodbye today—perhaps for the last time.

A crowd of about 300 clapped and shouted in a prolonged demonstration as the 80-year-old former prime minister boarded a plane for home at Idlewild airport.

With friends helping him, and using his familiar cane, Sir Winston proceeded slowly on a 200-foot walk from a terminal building to the airliner.

The crowd surged against iron barriers, which had been specially set up on each side of his path, and burst forth with resounding cheers.

Sir Winston smiled, took off his hat, held it aloft and eyed the well-wishers with obvious appreciation for their gesture.—AP.

Put fire out

The depositions, the detective alleged said that Calder had gone into the bedroom, got some papers and started lighting fires around Mrs Cotton's clothes.

The depositions continued: "He said 'If you don't give me my baby, you will have nothing left.'"

"I went into the bathroom and filled his shaving mug up with water and put the fire out."

"He said 'If you put that fire out, I will light one you won't put out.'"

The depositions then said that Calder went to the garage and returned with a tin of petrol.

On baby's legs

"He threw petrol over my truck and it went on the baby's legs."

"I took him to the sink and washed the petrol off his legs."

"He lit another match and threw it at me."

"When I started to burn he took the baby from me and

He refused

"I said 'help me' but my husband wouldn't."

"I went to the kitchen sink and got a saucepan of water and threw it over myself until the fire was out."

Detective Sergeant McBurney said that when he interviewed Calder and asked him why he had not his wife alight, he allegedly said "I got mad—I don't know why."

No plea was taken.—China Mail Special.

Macmillan tells of 'my talks with Kennedy'

London, Apr. 14.

The Prime Minister, Mr Harold Macmillan, tonight described as "complete nonsense," a theory put forward by an American newspaper last week that President Kennedy was determined to establish himself as leader of the free world, while discouraging him (Mr Macmillan) as "an honest broker between East and West."

Mr Macmillan was being asked questions on the BBC television "Press Conference" programme.

Speaking of his recent meetings with the American President, Mr Macmillan said: "What struck me more than any other meeting was that there was no element of negotiation. It was consultation—we talked very freely."

Enough

Questioned about Russia's conquest of space and the relative strength of Russia and the West, Mr Macmillan said: "In military power undoubtedly the world could destroy itself—both sides could destroy each other. But enough is enough in my view."

He expressed the hope that such things would never take place, and that the conflict would be in another field—partly technical, partly material and "partly for the souls of men."

"Surely our job is to hold on long enough, if we can hold on long enough, we have won our freedom and theirs," he added.

Britain had no plans at present for a space programme, although there existed a joint programme for scientific investigation in the launching of instruments. There was still the question as to whether Britain could make a joint European programme for the launcher.

The Prime Minister was questioned by John Freeman, editor of the New Statesman, Francis Boyd, political correspondent of the Guardian, and William Hardcastle, editor of the Daily Mail.—Reuters.

Russia's offer

United Nations, Apr. 14.

The Soviet Union today pleaded that its outer space achievements would be placed at the service of all peoples.

The Soviet delegation to the General Assembly issued a statement to this effect, in acknowledging congratulations from other members on the first manned space flight.—Reuters.

POLICE RECOVER PAINTINGS WORTH $8.5 MILLION

Antibes, Apr. 14.

Police today recovered more than HK$8.5 million worth of modern paintings a few hours after they had been stolen from the Riviera home of a Paris art dealer.

The 20 paintings included works by Picasso, Matisse, Legger, Marc Chagall and other prominent modern masters.

Police said the theft was reported by Anne Maeght, a Paris art dealer, last night. They searched the area around his summer villa at Saint-Pol de Venise and spotted two men loading bulky objects into a truck outside a lighted barber shop.

Further investigations led to the arrest of the barber, Charles Trabuc, and one other man. All 20 paintings were recovered.—UPI.

FILMS CURRENT & COMING
by ANTHONY FULLER

CARTHAGE IN FLAMES (Roxy & Majestic) A pyromaniac's dream; filmed in Technicolor; it will have the front of house customers cheering their heads off, while serious historians will cluck... cluck.

Carthage 146 A.D. and a great deal of unhappiness. A beautiful Roman girl is in love with a handsome Carthaginian, and this is the springboard for spectacle.

During the past twelve months, the Hongkong cinemas have pretty well made a Cooch's tour of all the ancient capitals, and I am reluctantly arriving at the conclusion that the chap who built Rome also built Carthage, Troy, and come to think of it, Jerusalem.

However, as the picture has it, during the last days of Carthage, Hiram, an excited pacifist, returns to his native land in search of his beloved.

On the way, he saves Fulvia, a ravishing Roman lady from being used as a T-bone steak for that old friend of ours, the god Moloch.

There follows a battle, and the Roman virgin Fulvia lends the boys a hand by going round and picking up the flaming arrows, and throwing them back at the enemy.

Then the Romans, as the Romans were apt to do when they got cross, fired Carthage, the omitted firing the film director.

From then on, its every man for himself. The pious, (plebs in the film) the salt of the earth, or the layabouts to you and me, rush all over the place, and take a long time getting nowhere.

Buildings fall on them, but the producer is not paying them to get killed in the first shot of the day, so they pick themselves up, throw off a few tons of rock, and start running again.

The picture has its moments. The sea battle, the cavalry charge, and Carthage in flames Hongkong will give in to see it, mark my words!

The story is predictable, the dubbing added by someone with no roof to their mouth, but for the understanding, it is the film of the year.

Anne Heywood speaks her own lines (apparently) and as the girl Fulvia rises above the script.

Jose Suarez, Maria Occhini, and David Gelin, who accepted the roles of Hiram, Ophir, and Phogor, respectively, are made idols by sheer bad dubbing.

At times the film looks too blown up in the photography scene, but I say again, this is what Hongkong wants, and it will be early doors only for the front stalls.

MACUMBA LOVE (King's & Broadway) This is an Eastman Colour study in voodoo, South American style.

The cast, not very well known to you, perform the following for your entertainment.

Walter Reed, an expose writer, arrives at an island off the coast of South America, to complete a book on voodoo. Voodoo, he claims, is responsible for a number of unsolved murders in the district.

A wealthy landowner, Ziva Rodann, warns Mr Reed not to interfere with the current voodoo queen, Ruth de Souza.

You old hands know enough about films to know that this piece of advice is given on the understanding that the screen will treat it with contempt.

That's just what happens, but to make it more complicated, Dana Andrews comes along with a good performance in his role of Barnett, the commercial air pilot, who too has his problems in that... and so on.

Effrem Zimbalist, Jr. gives a nice account of himself in the role of Heath, the pilot of the Navy jet, trying to save his marriage.

Anne Francis and John Kerr establish a conventional love affair, giving the film a popular appeal.

Following the custom of such novels and films as "The Crowded Sky" the flash-back technique is employed, in this case as the

There is plenty of room in the New Territories, or say at Big Wave Bay, and what would be nicer than a drive out and a movie seen while sitting in your car?

Scene from Macumba Love showing at the King's & Broadway. Juno Wilkinson and Walter Wellman. Eastman Colour. United Artists.

Reed's daughter arrives on her honeymoon, with William Wellman for her husband.

Voodoo queen, Miss de Souza is extremely cross, for these black magicians are very jealous of their powers, and most touchy concerning sceptics.

Well, Miss de Souza places Miss Rodann under a spell, and Miss Rodann is knocked off by the local gendarmes just as she is about to slay Mr Wellman in the interests of voodoo.

What the devil it all adds up to, I don't know. On the other hand, if you can see one or two people off merely by killing a white chicken at midnight, while Elvis Presley, or someone sings a song in his style, I think there is a lot to be said for voodoo.

But the film gave me the impression that voodoo is slightly illegal.

THE CROWDED SKY (Lee & Princess) This is an aerial melodrama, made in Technicolor, telling a story about certain "doomed types" in a sky crash, and taking time off to warn all plane pilots that they must obey instructions.

The story technique is the Wild Beum "Grand Hotel" pattern, several stories woven into one situation, and if it is not altogether novel, good acting and direction make it entertaining.

What happens is, two planes, one a Navy jet and the other an ordinary commercial line, take off at the same time, one at Washington and the other at San Diego.

At the climax of the film, they meet, and the author makes his points.

The film, however, does not labour its propaganda angle, and if the story of the characters in the planes is a trifle untidy, most situations are cleared before the film ends.

Dana Andrews comes along with a good performance in his role of Barnett, the commercial air pilot, who too has his problems in that... and so on.

Effrem Zimbalist, Jr. gives a nice account of himself in the role of Heath, the pilot of the Navy jet, trying to save his marriage.

planes are flying towards each other.

It's a newspaper headline story, a popular and versatile team, with a very obvious woman's angle, and in spite of the fact that it is a film about planes, I think the women will enjoy it better than the men.

THE LAWBREAKERS (Hoover & Gala) This is a romantic crime melodrama, unfolded against impressive big city backgrounds.

The story has a forthright lonely copper, waging war against a vice racket, and finally breaking it wide open.

In case a few customers are not particularly interested in crime, the film takes time off to visit a striptease show, and one or two smashups.

But in the main, the film sticks to the there's dishonour among thieves theme.

The film throws some nasty snacks at dishonest politicians and gives a hint of a suggestion that policemen are not paid what they are worth, nothing to what they might make if they were bad policemen.

Of course, the set pattern has to triumph: crime does not pay, but I wonder.

Jack Warden does a good job with the role of Gower, the incorruptible copper.

Vera Miles scores as the beautiful but bad Angela while Robert Douglas and Ken Lynch operate nicely as the badkids.

A good tale, virile team, sly feminine angle help this to score.

Defiant Tamils start own postal service in Jaffna

Colombo, Apr. 14.

The Federal Party agitating for Tamil language rights today started a parallel postal service in Jaffna.

Mr S. J. V. Chelvanayakam, the Federal Party leader, inaugurated the service at noon by selling the Party's own stamped envelopes, post-cards and stamps at the entrance to the Jaffna secretariat.

Mr M. V. Navaratnam, the Party's general secretary "posted" the first letter in a special pillar box carrying the inscription "Federal Party post box."

Party volunteers later delivered letters to high-ranking officials in the town informing them of the new service. The acting government agent got one which said "The women of Jaffna will not yield even if you and the government starve them into submission."

5,000

The pale green Federal Party postage stamps depict a schooner, a plough and a wheel, representing the major occupations of the north and east.

More than 5,000 10-cent stamps were sold by the party this afternoon, and hundreds queued up to buy them.

The postal service will at first be confined to the Jaffna peninsula, but it may be extended to other parts of Tamil-speaking northern and eastern provinces later.

In a statement today, Mr Chelvanayakam referred to the failure of negotiations with the government, and said that in the circumstances, Tamil people had no alternative but to resort to direct action and civil disobedience. They did so in full knowledge of the implications. —Reuters.

Activity among Portuguese leaders

Lisbon, Apr. 14.

There was intense activity among the political and military leaders of Portugal today following the far-reaching government shake-up announced yesterday by President Antonio de Oliveira Salazar.

Troops were consigned to their barracks. Outside police stations, policemen stood guard in steel helmets with submachineguns in their hands, which indicated they had been placed in a state of alert.

ANGOLA

Salazar, who announced the shake-up in a radio speech yesterday, said that it could be explained "by one word, and the word is Angola," the Portuguese African territory where a wave of armed outbursts by Africans has erupted.

Portuguese military leaders held emergency nightlong conferences, some of which lasted nearly until dawn today, new high-ranking military resignations and appointments were announced.

Adriano Moreira, named Portugal's new Overseas Minister yesterday, told journalists today: "I have nothing to say yet. I am preparing a statement on the overseas situation." —AFP.

Australians coming to discuss wheat deal

Melbourne, Apr. 14.

The Australian Government, a confirmative source said today, has refused to give the Australian Wheat Board a policy opinion on China's request to supply 500,000 tons of wheat on credit or "extended payment."

The Board had referred the proposal to the government because of the possible political issues involved. Although no official statement was issued, the sources said the Board was instructed to make its own decision after fully examining the situation.

Two members of the Board are flying to Hongkong tomorrow with general manager Mr Christopher Perrett to discuss the request with officials of the China Resources Company.

Perrett said the mission will remain in Hongkong for about three weeks, and added, "At this stage I don't know whether we will visit Peking or negotiate all of our business in Hongkong." —UPI.

Named after air aces

West Berlin, Apr. 14.

Three West German Air Force squadrons are to be named after world war one German fighter aces who between them were credited with 135 air victories, Defence Ministry sources said at Aulhorn.

A fighter squadron will be named after Baron Manfred von Richthofen, credited with 80 air victories before he was killed on the Western front in 1918. A second, a fighter-bomber squadron and a reconnaissance squadron will be named after Max Immelman (15 victories) and Oswald Boelke (40 victories) who were both shot down in 1916, aged 25. —China Mail Special.

U.S. musician bequeaths his skeleton to Australian museum

White Plains, N.Y., Apr. 14.

Percy Grainger, musician and composer who died on February 20, specified in his will filed for probate today that his skeleton go to an Australian museum.

"I give and bequeath my skeleton to the University of Melbourne, Australia, for preservation and possible display in the Grainger Museum," said Grainger.

He first directed that "my flesh be removed from my bones and the flesh destroyed."

Grainger was born in Melbourne on July 8, 1882, and made his concert debut there at the age of 10. He came to the United States in 1914 and became a citizen. He made his home in White Plains.

TO HIS WIFE
He was known internationally as a virtuoso pianist and clarinetist and composed such works as "Country Gardens," "Handle In The Strand" and "Molly On The Shore."

Grainger left an estimated $50,000 in property and directed that it all be left to his "beloved wife, Ella Viola Strom-Grainger."

The will appointed her to collect his drawings, paintings, musical and literary manuscripts and his correspondence.

He directed that copies be made, with one set of copies to go to the Library of Congress or some other "suitable library or repository" and that the originals and photostatic negatives go to the University of Melbourne for display in the museum. —AP.

Its highly accurate movement is enclosed in a special Oyster case, guaranteed 100% waterproof—and so, of course, 100% resistant to dust, dirt and damp of every kind. The Oyster is automatically wound by the Rolex Perpetual self-winding "rotor" which, by keeping an even tension on the mainspring, ensures even greater accuracy.

Rolex Oysters are officially issued to Royal Navy divers and have accompanied many important climbing expeditions, including Everest of 1953.

The British Everest Expedition of 1953. Sir John Hunt, leader of the Expedition, wrote: "The Rolex Oyster watches, with which members of the British team were equipped, again proved their dependability on Everest."
Any skier or ski mountaineer will find that a Rolex Oyster, chosen from the wide range available, will meet his specialized requirements perfectly.

Shirt company may take legal action

London, Apr. 14.

A British shirt company said today it was considering legal action against a firm, apparently Japanese, which is selling shirts under a name close to its own.

The non-iron shirts are being advertised in Kenya, Tanganyika, and Uganda under the name "Real Broke."

They are offered for sale at 15 shillings each against 49/6 for the shirts produced by the British firm, Real-Brook.

A spokesman for Real-Brook told the Daily Sketch: "There is little doubt that these are of Japanese origin."

"We are considering legal action but until we are certain where they are coming from, there is little we can do." —Reuters.

RAF Bomber Command NOT FOR NATO

London, Apr. 14.

Mr Harold Watkinson, the Defence Minister, has dispelled any ideas that Britain might be prepared to merge its independent nuclear deterrent with Nato, diplomatic observers said today.

Bomber command carries Britain's nuclear deterrent. There had been speculation that Mr Harold Macmillan, the Prime Minister, may have envisaged in his talks with President Kennedy in Washington last week that both the United States and Britain should abandon control over their independent nuclear deterrents and merge them in a Nato partnership. —Reuters.

New colours presented

Darm, Apr. 14.

The Duke of Gloucester, Colonel-in-chief of the Gordon Highlanders, presented the first battalion of the Gordons with new colours.

A crowd of well over two thousand witnessed the ceremony at Trenchard Barracks, Celle, West Germany when, in brilliant sunshine, the drums were played in a hollow square and the new colours laid on them.

It was the second time the Duke had presented new colours to the battalion. The last occasion was in 1937 at Redford Barracks, Edinburgh. It is probably unique for the same person to present two separate colours to the same battalion within a space of 24 years. —China Mail Special.

Birthday, so fine is halved

London, Apr. 14.

It was his 68th birthday, said Horace Harris, unemployed, no fixed address, explaining to the magistrates at Leicester why he was drunk and incapable in the street.

He was fined 10/- "But," Harris said, "I haven't got that much." And the chairman said: "All right, as it was your birthday—5/-." —London Express Service.

HOMESIDE PICTORIAL

LEFT: Queen Elizabeth II looking into a microscope during a recent visit to the Biology Laboratory of Kingston Grammar School, Kingston-upon-Thames, Surrey, England. Her Majesty's visit to the Royal Borough was on the Grammar School's 400th Anniversary.—COI Photo.

ABOVE: As the great anti-bomb marches ended in Trafalgar Square, London, another march immediately formed up and headed north for Scotland and Holy Loch, the US base where their Polaris-equipped submarine will be serviced. At the head of the new procession is a canoe, mounted on wheels, which will be pulled along the 430 miles to Holy Loch and then, presumably, launched in a protest paddle against the US supply ship Proteus.

ABOVE: British Post Office engineers at work on part of the cable laying gear aboard Her Majesty's Telegraph Ship "Monarch," which will be used this summer for laying the Anglo-Canadian Trans-Atlantic Telephone cable, the first stage of a Commonwealth round-the-world telephone cable some 32,000 miles in length. The laying of the telephone cable around the world by the joint enterprise of the self-governing Commonwealth nations will be the greatest telephone project ever undertaken, and is estimated to cost at least £88,000,000, about half of which will be contributed by the United Kingdom Government.—COI Photo.

ABOVE: The official British pattern of life-jacket has not changed since 1894, and in an attempt to interest the Ministry of Transport (the controlling authority) in a more modern type of life-jacket, Mr Mark Shaw staged a demonstration in London. A man jumped into the pool wearing, in turn, the official life-jackets of Holland, Italy, U.S.A., and Britain's M.O.T. Each time the man, feigning unconsciousness, fell into the water face down (centre), and stayed face down, all set to drown. This happened even when he wore both the official British types at once. But girls wearing the Marksay life saving waistcoats, when they went in face down, were automatically turned face up, with nose and mouth well clear of the water.

RIGHT: Mr George Ball (right), President Kennedy's emissary to the Development Assistance Group, leaving Church House, Westminster, London. The group, which deals with aid to under-developed countries, was meeting under the chairmanship of Mr Solwyn Lloyd. Mr Ball is the US Under-Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

ABOVE: Lunchtime crowds filled Glasgow's Southside street when suddenly, without warning, tons of masonry tore away from the front of the old Lyric Theatre and thundered to the pavement. Within seconds rescuers were tearing with bare hands at the tangled mass of masonry; Police and ambulances arrived, and after ten minutes furious work, 17-year-old Margaret Martin (pictured here) was freed and rushed to the Royal Infirmary.

RIGHT: Jomo Kenyatta, organiser of the Mau Mau rebellion, and now in exile in Kenya, was once a hard-up student at the London School of Economics. Twenty-five years ago he took a part as a bit-actor at Shepperton Studios for the film "Sanders of the River." A still, showing Kenyatta, was unearthed by actor-writer Richard Huggett, at work on a biography of Leslie Banks, who played the title role. And it was Paul Robeson, co-star of "Sanders of the River" who identified Kenyatta. Picture shows: Kenyatta (right). Third from left, Leslie Banks, playing "Sanders of the River".

LEFT: Shakespeare's "Macbeth" is being staged, for the first time, it is claimed, with an all-African cast, and with the setting changed from Scotland in the 11th century to Natal, South Africa, during the Zulu wars of the early 19th century. The production is at Glamis Stadium, Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia. All the performers wear Zulu costumes of the period. The part of Macbeth is played by a young African broadcaster, Joseph Chazwah, and Lady Macbeth by a 21-year-old school-teacher, Ruth Mucha-wayo. Picture shows Joseph Chazwah as Macbeth, in the "Is this a dagger" speech, outside his grass hut.

REPORT ON QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY PARADE

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY PARADE: Perhaps the most colourful ceremonial occasion of the year in Hongkong is the annual military parade to celebrate the birthday of Her Majesty the Queen.

This year it takes place on Friday morning, when thousands of people lining Gascoigne Road in Kowloon will watch His Excellency the Governor Sir Robert Black take the salute as unit after unit of the military forces stationed here march past. There will be men from all three branches of the armed services, with tanks, other vehicles and even mules to add variety. And of course there will be a fly-past of military aircraft as well.

Military ceremonial is always interesting, and on this occasion there is the added interest of the "symbolic presence of Her Majesty," when for a moment the Governor leaves the saluting base, the Royal Standard is broken, and a twenty-one gun salute and a feu-de-jolie are fired.

Radio Hongkong will be broadcasting commentaries on the parade on Friday morning, starting at 9.55 am. There will be a team of three commentators—Derek Hogg, Michael Page and Victor Price, who will also produce the programme. Incorporated in the commentary will be pre-recorded interviews with men who will be taking part in the parade or who have helped to organise it.

BOOKSHOP: Wednesday, 8.15 pm—One of the commentators, Michael Page, will be heard in the role of book-reviewer on Wednesday evening, when he will talk about a book by a former resident of Hongkong, F. J. Omanney, who until recently was on the teaching staff of the University here. Mr Omanney's book, which aroused a good deal of interest when it was published a few weeks ago, is called "Eastern Winds." In addition, Michael Page will review in the programme a book about Thailand, "People of the Sun," by John Blofeld.

TWO FULL OPERAS: Sunday, 8.45 pm and Friday 9.30 pm (FM only)—Tomorrow evening listeners can hear an opera which has been recognised for over two hundred years as the best ever written by an English composer—"Dido and Aeneas," by Purcell. It is a small scale opera, lasting just over an hour, and will be broadcast in the Sunday Concert at 8.45 pm. The cast of singers is headed by Kirsten Flagstad (soprano), Elisabeth Schwarzkopf (soprano), and Thomas Hemsley (tenor); and the Mermald Singers and Orchestra are conducted by Geraint Jones. Also in the programme of the Sunday Concert, listeners can hear the English folk song suite by Vaughan Williams.

The other complete opera performance to be broadcast this week is of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman." This is the work in which Wagner first struck his characteristic note, and tells the tale of the famous Dutchman who was fated to wander around the world in his phantom ship until such time as a woman was found who was prepared to die for him. The part of the Dutchman is sung by Josef Metternich, and of Senta, the Norwegian girl who finally releases him from his terrible fate, by Annalies Kupfer. The Symphony Orchestra of RIAS, Berlin, is conducted by Ferenc Fricsay. "The Flying Dutchman" can be heard on FM only on Friday evening at 9.30 p.m.

SOCCER AND RUGBY: Tonight, from 11.45 pm—Today sees the culmination of the home soccer and rugby seasons, with the England-Scotland match at Wembley, and Ireland v. France in the International Rugby Championship in Dublin. The England-Scotland match will decide the soccer championship, but in the case of rugby it has already been decided; France have already won, and the interest is in whether Ireland can beat the champions as they did in exactly similar circumstances two years ago. Radio Hongkong will be relaying commentaries on the second half of both matches this evening.

The soccer commentary—by Raymond Glendinning and Douglas Lowe—will start at 11.45 pm, and will be followed at 12.45 am by a recorded description of play in Dublin by Rex Alston and Sammy Walker.

NOW A

New Vimpiano

The new console is the result of a first-class designer, plus Eavestaff skill and craftsmanship. Completely redesigned — it will blend happily with either contemporary or traditional furniture. Available in teak, mahogany or walnut, with full piano polish or rich satin finish.

And remember it is a happy home that has a piano — every home that has children should have one. There is nothing quite so rewarding as seeing youngsters discovering the sheer joy of creating music for themselves. So many benefits will follow as a result of their accomplishment; popularity, a trained memory, perhaps even fame.

You may have an old piano which has given sterling service for many years. If you feel that it is no longer good enough for your child to play, why not get a new one? It will cost you less than you probably imagine. Your old instrument will be gladly taken in part exchange.

REDIFFUSION

NEW SERIES OF 'TAKE IT FROM HERE'

Tomorrow night at 9.35 p.m. Rediffusion is presenting the first in a new series of thirteen programmes of "Take It From Here," with Jimmy Edwards, Dick Bentley, Jane Whitfield, Wallas Eaton, Toni Eden, The Polka Dots, Sid Phillips and his band and the BBC Revue Orchestra conducted by Harry Rabinowitz.

In the last episode of "Take It From Here," Eth was waiting impatiently at the church to be wedded to her beloved; Ron was crossing the quiet road to join her—and then Mr Glum saw that broken manhole cover... Etched in our minds, that scene has haunted us ever since. Did he or didn't he fall in? Eric Merriman and Barry Took have replaced Frank Muir and Denis Norden as scriptwriters for this series. Yes! The Glums are back—thanks to Jimmy Edwards, Dick Bentley and Jane Whitfield.

The scriptwriters say there are some changes in the show, 'a new feature, new music spots, and of from time to time we change the jokes.' Eric Merriman and Barry Took made a name for themselves with "Beyond Our Ken" after a wide experience of comedy writing for radio, films and the theatre. Starting tomorrow evening, and for the next three Sunday evenings at 8.15 pm "Interlude For Music" will feature Humphrey Lyttelton and His Band. Humphrey Lyttelton (affectionately referred to by his admirers as 'Humph') is one of the most popular band leaders of today, and not only in his own country—the band's reputation now extends across Europe, America and beyond. 'Humph' had a lot of publicity at first because of his public school and family background, but by now he has outgrown the need for such forms of advertisement. The announcement Humphrey Lyttelton and his Band alone is enough to bring in the crowds who flock to hear them and his brilliant solo trumpet playing. He is moving away a little from the New Orleans style which made his group famous soon after the war, and now plays some modern numbers in most of his programmes. In these "Interludes for Music" listeners will find something to suit everyone who appreciates fine playing and infectious rhythms.

Macao will meet Hongkong tomorrow at 5.00 pm at the Hongkong Club Stadium in their annual Interport soccer match. Jock Sloan will be on hand to do a commentary on the second half of this game at 5.50 pm.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY ANNUAL PARADE

The annual parade and march past for the Queen's birthday starts at 10 am on Friday and John Wallace is the producer and chief commentator for this annual event. The commentary starts with a description of the scene at 9.45. John Wallace will be assisted by John Gunstone and Tom Cross.

The week - daily feature, Housewives' Choice, is reduced to 45 minutes for this day only and a Bank Holiday Concert takes the place of the usual Composer of the Day Programme (2-3). Our racing Correspondent's tips for the first day of the twelfth meeting at Happy Valley on Saturday can be heard after the News at 6.10.

That a writer is entitled to change his views as a result of events that have taken place after he has given them is the opinion of E. M. Forster, author of "A Passage to India" and other books. However, he does not consider that the writings should be changed. On Sunday evening at 9.30 we hear him reading his essay "What I Believe". This was written in 1939 and although his opinions have changed somewhat since those days, they stand as being representative of quite a large body of people in those far-off days before World War II.

The birth of Von Suppe — whose music has greatly enriched the repertoire of the brass and military band — is commemorated in Composer of the Day on Monday (2-3). Anthony Hopkins talks about Mozart, and particularly about the Jupiter Symphony at 10.15 on Wednesday night. This is followed by a complete performance of the work by the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt. The recent visit of the Juilliard String Quartet has focused music lovers' attention on Chamber Music. The Budapest String Quartet are playing Mozart's Quartet No 16 in E flat, K 428 on Monday evening at 9.30, and Beethoven's String Quartet No 45 in A minor, opus 132 on Wednesday at 2 pm. Opera lovers can hear acts 2 and 3 of Sadko by Rimsky Korsakov performed by the Solists, Chorus and Orchestra of the National Opera, Zagreb from 11.15 to midnight on Thursday.

The selection of these interesting writers (drawn from George Bernard Shaw's Career from 8.30 to 9 on Tuesday evening, and local writers who would like some of their work included in one of these programmes are invited to send it to PO Box 3000, Hongkong. Presented Show of the Week John Wallace with The Far East Motors Show from 7.30 to 8 on Thursday.

A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE

Perry Como tonight at 8 o'clock has as his guests The Limelites, a vocal instrumental trio, who are joined by European Singer Caterina Valente, and comedienne Nancy Walker.

The show is opened by Mr Como and his guests with the Peter Gennaro dancers and Ray Charles singers and later Miss Valente demonstrates her versatility with songs in Swedish, French, Japanese, Italian and German.

In The Four Just Men at 9.20, lawyer Jeff Ryder (Richard Conte) finds himself at the mercy of desperate, ruthless convicts who hold him hostage during a pitched battle with State Troopers. Ryder is faced with the almost impossible task of convincing the prisoners that their surrender is the only way to ensure a fair hearing for their complaints about prison conditions.

Oscar Wilde's famous comedy A Woman Of No Importance is the play of the week on Sunday at 9.45 with a brilliant cast to handle the sparkling lines. They are led by Helen Cherry, Griffith Jones, Athene Seyler, Marian Spencer and Gwen Watford. The story concerns a witty but dissolute peer who discovers that the young man he is about to engage as his secretary is, in fact, his illegitimate son. When he proceeds to make advances to the young man's fiancée a situation develops which is ideally suited to the acid brilliance of the Oscar Wilde gift for dialogue.

Glen Gould, one of the most unusual of modern concert pianists is featured in a filmed recording session for Tuesday's documentary called, appropriately enough, Glenn Gould On The Record. In Have Gun Will Travel at 10.05, Paladin (Richard Boone) stakes himself and a wistful little hobo to a multi-thousand dollar bet against two crooked gamblers who persuade the hobo into walking a high wire across a thousand foot canyon—Strother Martin and Fay Spain co-star. "Three Steps to Murder" is the last in the present series of Markham on Thursday at 8.35, and at 9.15 Wagon Train features "Tent City Story" Wagon-master Seth Adams, and frontier scout Flint McCullough, have split up in this episode which stars Audrey Totter and Wayne Morris, but later when heavy rains force the train to seek shelter at a tent city, Adams discovers that McCullough is the town's Marshall.

Made in Heaven, the feature film on Friday, stars David Tomlinson and Petula Clark as Basil and Julie Topham, a young couple who have been married for a year. Apart from the fact that they have to live with Basil's parents (Charles Victor and Sophie Stewart), and grandpa (A. E. Matthews), all is going as well as can be expected. If only they had a reliable and efficient servant! Then joyfully the problem is solved with the arrival of Marta, a Hungarian, whose purpose in working as a domestic help is not quite clear.

But whatever it was that made Marta turn to a domestic career one thing soon establishes itself... her charms are sufficient to turn every man's head in the district and Basil and Julie have a perfect opportunity to find out whether or not marriages are indeed "Made in Heaven."

THE KEY THAT OPENS A DOOR ON OLD GAIETY

New York.

ON a side street in Manhattan there is an old brownstone house marked only by a gaslight outside the entrance. A key to the heavy wooden door costs about £35. But the key opens the door to Yesterday.

For this is New York's famous Gaslight Club—one of a rapidly growing number of key clubs springing up throughout the United States. The new clubs are all copied after the original.

Along with membership in the Gaslight Club comes the key which is the only means of entrance to the club's highly romantic version of the "good old days."

The club's decorative motif is generally that of the "Gay Nineties," but its popular third-floor re-creates the special "forbidden fruit" naughtiness of the "Roaring Twenties."

Attraction

The extraordinary success of the Gaslight Club has surprised almost everyone including, perhaps, Burton Browne, the advertising executive who founded the first Gaslight Club in Chicago seven years ago. But Browne's clubs are all built on a solid psychological foundation—that even the most solid businessman has a yearning to "live dangerously"—without suffering any of the consequences.

CHESS

By LEONARD BARDEN

The Caro-Kann Defence, with which Botvinnik has had many successes in his world championship games, is under a cloud these days because of an attack which Botvinnik himself originally introduced some 30 years ago. Here is an illustration (Friedman v. Szabo) from the world team championship, 1 P-K4, P-QB3; 2 P-Q4, P-Q4; 3 P-P, P-P; 4 P-QB4, R-KB3; 5 Kt-QB3, P-KB3; 6 R-K1, B-K2; 7 P-P, P-P; 8 Kt-B3; 9 Kt-K5, B-K2; 10 Castles, Castles; 11 R-K1, R-B1; 12 B-K1B, B-K3; 13 B-QKt, P-B; 14 Kt-R4, P-QB4; 15 P-P, B-P; 16 Kt-B, R-Kt; 17 Q-Q4, Q-K3; 18 B-Kt, P-B; 19 Kt-Q3, R-B5; 20 Q-BP, R-KK5; 21 Kt-B4, R-Kt; 22 QR-Q1, Q-P; 23 R-Kt, R-Kt; 24 R-K8 ch, R-R; 25 Q-Q, R-R.

Solution No. 6012: 1 R-R8, K-K2; 2 R-QK4, or 1... K-Q2; 2 R-Q4.

(London Express Service).

Probably the best reason for the Gaslight Club's success, however, can be found in the beautiful girls who serve as waitresses there.

Chosen and supervised by vivacious Jean Browne, wife of the founder, the girls generally have a show business background. "We've also had a couple of British girls here. Another of our girls married Sandro Bionella, a shipping magnate," she said.

A former musical comedy star herself, Jean Browne selects her girls as carefully and pampers them as tenderly as any harem keeper out of the Arabian Nights.

"We choose our girls for such things as the quality of their skin, their educational level and their manner of speech," said Mrs. Browne.

"We also select them for their ability to engage in 'team work'."

Tension

It's a little like working in a submarine—it's fun, but there is a lot of tension and nervousness, so the girls have to be able to get along well together.

Mrs. Browne also likes the girls to be from five to ten pounds overweight. "They look better in their costumes," and it's more accurate historically.

Displaying a rare combination of taste, intelligence and showmanship, Mrs. Browne had costumes designed for the girls that resemble beautiful turn-of-the-century ball gowns "with the bottoms cut off."

The Brownes have been equally fastidious about their decor. "We have tried to avoid making the era look ridiculous," Mrs. Browne pointed out. "For example, our waiters do not wear handkerchiefs moustaches. That would be burlesquing the period."

The Brownes have conducted intensive searches to collect genuine antiques, paintings, and chandeliers of the era. The result is a nostalgic recreation of another time that permits New Yorkers to forget, for a few hours, the 20th century that is on the other side of the heavy wooden door.

JAK

go sight-seeing at Woburn

JAK, who is a traditionalist, and also broke, has decided to open up Mortgage Manor, his semi-detached at Wimbledon, to the British public.

To date, the exhibits are comprised of an exact reproduction of The Stag at Bay, two brass candle-sticks from the Portobello-road, and a piece of the hallway from which an earlier JAK is said to have been hanged on the local Common.

Not much of a show, admittedly, but greater enterprises have been started on less, as JAK and I discovered when we went down to get a text tip on this Stately Homes lark at Woburn Abbey.

Did you know that the Duke of Bedford would never be whacking it up at Woburn but for a certain Johnny Russell belting down to the seashore on a dirty night at Weymouth?

A TRAVELLER

Johnny, it seems, was a commercial traveller. They were called merchant adventurers in his day back in the 16th century, but they spun pretty much the same kind of sales-talk as the detergent-deodorant bashers of 1961.

But Johnny had a gimmick, see. He alone of the South Coast representatives could put over his patter in Spanish.

So, when young Phil, son of King Philip III of Spain, got shipwrecked at Weymouth on his way to see Henry VII in London, the only local who could tell him where to dry off was Jan Russell's boy, Johnny. A real smart operator. In no time at all, Johnny had packed his samples and was doing his Spanish act at Court, where, in the fullness of the years, he became a Minister of State, first Earl of Bedford, and the owner of Woburn Abbey under the last will and testament of Henry VIII.

Henry, it appears, had plenty of abbots to spare at the time, and Woburn had been reckoned no more than a derelict dump after the abbey had been hanged on an oak tree outside the front door for speaking disrespectfully of Anne Boleyn—in English.

HIS LINE

Five ails and 13 dukes later, they've put Johnny's picture in the passage (chop called Holbein painted it) and tidied up the abbey no end.

The present incumbent, also named John, may or may not speak Spanish, but he certainly doesn't have to wait for shipwrecked sailors at Weymouth. His line is selling history to the British and teaching it to the Americans.

More than 2,000,000 of the peasantry have wandered round the 3,000 acres of Woburn's stately pleasure since 1956—at half-a-crown a time, house extra.

With parachutists jumping about all over the place and with portable radio receivers picking up recorded commentaries on the accumulated treasures, they are hoping for at least 10,000 sight-seeing sets.

The Duke had slipped out to San Francisco when we called, but a detached Controller, from New Zealand, Major Edgar Hargreaves, made us most welcome in one of the lesser breakfast rooms.

Behind him, William Lord Russell was consulting his weeping family before being beheaded in 1658. A historic picture, really for William of Orange scrubbed Bill's conviction six years later and promoted his Dad from fifth Earl to first Duke.

Not much use to Bill, of course, but the painting lends an imposing background to Major Hargreaves. Probably stops him talking out of turn, too.

Busy man, but not too busy to give JAK a tip or two on the Stately Homes business. We now know exactly what to do, for instance, when the village doctor wants to borrow a mandarin duck, when a film company wishes to tether one of your prize cows to a parking meter in London, and when the Russian Government offers to swap a European bison bull for some of your Pere David deer.

Major Hargreaves also offered invaluable advice on the kind of dining-room you should run to—especially if your dining-room happens to overlook one of your 24 lakes.

For a start, you need £1,000,000-worth of pictures of Venetian water-works by a painter and decorator called Canaletto. "Blimey—all done by 'and,'" said a well-known visitor recently.

The fourth Duke, another John, ordered 24 of these Canalettos and so was able to get them wholesale.

Feeding arrangements will solve themselves. If your guests grow tired of truffles and sausage-and-mush, you can always slip outside and get yourself an emu or a wallaby off the estate.

But you will need about £10,000-worth of silverware for the 12-legged, 18th table in white and gold. When you want the mustard, don't just grab—ask Ernest, the butler or one of the liveried Italian footmen to pop down and get it.

Reaching recklessly across the glass-topped table is not only bad manners but also a potential danger to the men of the Bedfordshire Militia, who have been standing in sterling silver next to the ducal salt-cellars since 1792.

Candelabra, cherubs on the chandelier, console tables, a gun-carriage for the wine, nifty nudes supporting the French clock, a marble fireplace, peacock china, tapestry screens, a dozen red leather chairs, a Savonnerie carpet in old rose, and Esop's Fables in bas relief above the doors you will naturally take in your stride. No problems here.

But the curtains in scarlet silk brocade can be rather trying. The drapes in the Woburn dining-room haven't been up more than a hundred years, and already they need replacing. The lowest tender so far is £5,000.

However, there is wear and tear in every trade. All you have to do in the face of Stately Home depreciation is to flog a Canaletto, build a new wing on the Chinese Dairy, or put up the price of Peta's Corners.

ONLY HEALTHY HAIR CAN BE BEAUTIFUL

London.
YOU cannot chop your mother up in Massachusetts, as the song runs, and for your further information neither can you hock a tiger skin in Newington Butts.

This is a very fair tiger skin I have. It is longer than Prince Philip's, measuring 10ft. from the tip of its plastic tongue to the end of its slightly mouling tail.

Memories

"Twack!" went the door of the pledge office in the Butts. I hadn't heard that characteristic sound since I pawned my typewriter for her, whoever she was, in Aberdeen in 1951.

It was the night of the dance, remember, darling? And after all the money I spent on you, you went off with a red-haired Scottish schoolmaster in his car.

"I've brought this tiger skin," I said to the dear old "uncle" behind the counter. The dear old uncle, like all pawnbrokers, affects silvery hair. He ignored me. From another customer he took in a blanket and an alarm clock.

"About this tiger skin," I said. "Ten bob on the clock," said uncle. "A pound on the blanket."

Pawnbrokers in Britain are in a declining business. But nothing is so marked as the way they decline to take any interest in tiger skins.

My hopes rose in one pawnshop when the man stared for some seconds, apparently at the tiger, and then remarked: "It's give you three quid for your suit."

What did he think I was going to do—take off my suit and walk out of the shop like a Mau-Mau in the tiger skin?

Troubles

Pawnbrokers, until recently, were going out of business at the rate of one a week. In prosperous Britain they never had it so bad.

Five thousand pop-shops flourished in Britain at the beginning of the First World War. That figure is now down to around 600.

The decline has been stemmed to some extent by the Pawnbrokers' Act, 1960, which allowed pawnbrokers to charge a higher rate of interest (25 per cent per annum) on the more expensive pledges.

A £10 loan brings in 4s. 2d. a month. More important, the 1960 Act allows pawnbrokers to dispose of unredeemed goods after six months, instead of 12 months, which cuts their storage overheads.

Brighter

I talked to Lord Meston, barrister and author of an out-of-the-way little volume called "The Law of Moneylenders" who steered the Pawnbrokers' Act through the Lords.

He said: "Perhaps things have brightened a little for pawnbrokers. But the fact is they are not liable to do well in an era of full employment."

Lord Meston confining in his never pawned anything in his life. But, of course, some pawnbrokers count the aristocracy among their most rewarding customers. A high-class pawnbroker, specialising in the rare trade, is Sutton's of Victoria.

PETER CHAMBERS

EFFERVESCENT AND AS FRESH AS THE WEEK-END

Pawnbrokers never pay out on tiger skins 10 feet long!

Baroness Stoeckel, tireless chronicler of the life and hard times of Russia's expatriate nobility, was reminiscing to me about Sutton's. I remember the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia pawning her necklaces there. It was done in a private room, of course.

"But meeting at Sutton's to pawn one's jewellery became quite a social event for Russians."

Mr. A. Clabhorn, of Attentborough, recalled his early days as a pawnbroker in Kennington, South London: "That's when the apprentices used to sleep under the counter, and a working man's wife might come in three days in a row to pawn things."

"Monday it would be his best boots, Tuesday his Sunday suit, Wednesday the blankets. Then on Friday night she'd come back and redeem the lot."

No change

Pawnbrokers' offices don't change a bit. The paint is still cocoa-brown, and in most of them the partitioned privacy is upheld. Tak, tak, it's shocking to be seen hocking!

One uncle, unusually communicative, read me a sample list from his register of pledges: "Electric fire, cricket bat, tape-recorder, cuckoo-clock, typewriter, bed-jacket, wedding ring, hairbrush, wig, 20 boxes of query boards, micrometer, saxophone, bird-in-a-cage, briefcase, crash helmet..."

He turned to his assistant: "What was that you took, Joe, the other day?"

"Oh, yes, the electric kettle," said Joe. "A woman brought in an electric kettle and after she left I found it was full of cooked macaroni. Can you beat it—macaroni!"

Not by any means does one pawnbroker give you as good a deal as any other.

Offers for my suit varied between £3 and £8. For an electric razor which cost me 28 dollars (£10) in New York, the best offer was £3 10s.

One tough old bird shook his silvery locks and said the razor wasn't worth a penny over £1 to him.

I saw exactly the same razor in his window afterwards, priced second-hand at £5 10s.

Timing

On the other hand, some fellows manage to put it over the pawnbroker. Mr. Bryce McNab, a film-writer, told me with some relish how he managed to hock a broken watch for a lady in temporary need of the cash.

"The watch ran exactly for one minute if you tapped it hard," said McNab. "So the whole thing was a question of timing."

No such success attended my own tour of the pawnshops. For about one thing all the old "uncles" agreed. They refused to be left holding the tiger.

ANONYMITY—HIS FAVOURITE MASK

MUFFLED in a heavy overcoat, he drew hardly a stare from the Sunday sight-seers as he wandered abroad in the thin Moscow sunshine.

In the fashionable Hotel National he sat unnoticed over his Georgian wine and caviare as young Russians stopped around him to Dixieland strains.

No protocol marked his coming. No strolling Muscovite could ever have guessed that his presence there made a little silver of history: the first visit to the USSR by a member of the British Royal Family since the Revolution.

This pleased him. The smile was almost grateful on the face of this rather intense, earnestly good-looking young man of 38. Which is almost the whole point about George, Hereditary Prince of Greece, cousin of the Queen, Seventh Earl of Harewood.

The anonymity, which he cannot always win so readily, meant that he had been accepted at a quite different level than matters to him at least as much as a professional.

Royal blood

For the Seventh Earl is also one of the world's leading musical administrators; a top opera man and, since last year, the hard-working artistic director of the Edinburgh International Festival. He was the first member of the Royal Family to shape for himself a real career, based on his own expert knowledge.

There was rarely a master object lesson in contemporary reality for Dickens-reading Muscovites. Here was a young man of royal blood who has won through to responsibility not because of status, but despite it and on merit.

In an odd kind of way, the legend of titled ease is almost more easily sifted for this Earl behind the Iron Curtain than at home.

When first he went to work at Covent Garden, Lord Harewood has revealed, the only real fear of the musical Establishment was that they would be accused of taking him on the strength of his name.

Even now, when he returns from abroad sometimes, there are those who ask, in the way one has always been used to asking an English Lord, whether it has been business or pleasure.

The last time it happened, just before Christmas, there was an understandable note of asperity in his voice as he replied:

"I have slept in six different places for the last six nights. I would hardly call that pleasure."

But on the whole, Lord Harewood has made his point. He is an accepted authority; and exhilaratingly clear of the tight, restrictive little world of country-squire royalty that was never nearly satisfying enough for young royal gentlemen of astonished at his excellence, were inviting him back as a purpose and imagination. His first appearance on a T.V. first-rate performer. Now he "Brains Trust" was intended as does programmes for sixth a gimmick. Soon the producers, farmers too.

He is royalty still; but a new kind, with a musical kingdom. It is the proof of Lord Harewood's resolve to do a real job well that, when he took on the Festival directorship, it had to be on his own terms: with a guaranteed free hand in programme-building.

There will be no cosy, comfortable space of Beethoven and Brahms at his first Edinburgh Festival this year. There will be when he was six, he embarked shocks and excitement: overtones of Schoenberg and Liszt.

It is the proof of his achievement that he can go as a plain citizen to Russia, at the personal invitation of the Soviet Government, to negotiate the appearance of famous Russian performers at the 1962 Festival.

It is no surprise to find so purposeful a career well-rooted; that young Lascelles had always a fair idea of what he sought from life.

Or that even as a teen-age Eton schoolboy, tending to shut himself away with operatic records, he had an inkling already that a venerable family tradition and the rolling acres of a North Yorkshire manor house were never going to be enough.

determined on his chosen course.

He found stimulation in working as music critic for a left-wing magazine. He began to be known as a patron of music and musicians.

Then, one day, he slipped into a back pew at the Aldburgh Festival to hear a recital by a beautiful, gifted, dark-eyed young Viennese pianist.

They talked afterwards—and a royal love story began. It might have been a story with a different ending had not Lord Harewood's mother, the Princess Royal, been sympathetic from the start to the idea of an heir-in-line discarding Debut for true love's sake.

So Maria Stein from Vienna, the daughter of music publisher Erwin Stein, went home to tea at St James's Palace; and soon the young couple were seen on every musical occasion together.

And, after a fairy-tale wedding in 1940, a very special kind of social life began to revolve about a quiet twelve-roomed house in Orme Square, Kensington.

Composers, long-haired and even foreign, were seen calling there; musicians famous and obscure. There was usually a musical committee lady or two for lunch with the Countess; and always a wealth of like minds at the dinner-parties that involved no protocol, and the Earl serving from the buffet.

Lord Harewood was becoming known, too, for his association with the English Opera Group; then as the founder and first editor of the magazine "Opera."

In 1951 he gave up his editorship to join the staff of Covent Garden Opera, first as an administrative assistant and then as Controller of Opera Planning.

By now there was no doubt: he was making a notable impression on the musical world, which is tougher and less impressionable than it sometimes seems.

It has all worked out delectably well. It takes more than a titled dilettante to navigate to triumph success, as Lord Harewood did three years ago, an undertaking like the Leeds Centenary Festival.

The royal patron is no figurehead to such bodies as the Music Advisory Committee of the British Council, the English Stage Society and the Royal Manchester College of Music.

Nor do struggling young performers getting a leg up fall to get it, once Lord Harewood knows about it.

More mettle

To win his freedom the professional way, he has had to show proof of mettle more than other men. And now the Princess Royal, who fought for his right to do it, is content to be left almost alone to do the local honours at Harewood House, the family home.

Lord Harewood sees little of his 7,000 acres; he cannot be there to shape the estate improvements for which £200,000 worth of family jewels were sold last January.

He has a job to do. And he gets it a very adequate reward indeed to be able to sit in the Moscow Hall of Unions where Francis Gary Powers was tried, and to listen unrecognised to an orchestral concert.

Then to see about booking the Leningrad Symphony Orchestra for Britain.

"Yes, I am happy", he says. "I'm doing the sort of thing that I like doing and that I know I do better than I would anything else."

To the Seventh Earl, there is nothing at all special about any of this. He is just another busy professional chap.

Which is precisely what makes him special.

HE IS THE LEADER OF BRITAIN'S FASCISTS. SHE IS ONE OF THE FAMOUS MITFORD SISTERS, AND TODAY SHE SPEAKS FRANKLY OF HER MARRIAGE TO THE MAN WITH WHOM SHE ONCE SHARED A JAIL CELL.

This is life with Mosley...

WHAT is it like to be married to one of the most hated men in Britain? What is it like to hear your husband cursed by crowds of indignant citizens?

The wife of Sir Oswald Mosley should know. For 25 years she has been married to the leader of the Fascist movement in Britain.

"He is the most wonderful person in the world," said Lady Mosley. "I've never met anyone like him." And Lady Mosley, now aged 50, has met some unusual people in her life.

She is one of the six Mitford sisters. The others include Nancy, the arbiter of what's U and what's not; Deborah, Duchess of Devonshire; Jessica, a Communist who married her cousin, who was both a Communist and the nephew of Sir Winston Churchill; Unity, who as a child etched her bedroom windows with swastikas and who as an adult wore a jewelled one given her by Hitler.

His dream

His father, Lord Redesdale, was regarded as something of an eccentric. Possibly because when he thought his daughters needed exercise he would hunt them across country with bloodhounds.

Possibly because in his loathing of all "outsiders," he lumped together colours and nationalities quite indiscriminately. Jessica reports that when one of her cousins married an Argentinean of pure Spanish descent her father commented: "I hear that Robin's married a black."

"My father," Lady Mosley says, "was just a terribly normal Englishman."

"But thoughtful people like my husband don't have this feeling against foreigners."

"Since the war, it has been his greatest dream that we should have a united Europe. He thinks with the Empire gone it is our only hope. And then a united Europe could divide Africa between black and white."

"My husband is not anti-Negro. But he realises that black people and white people lead more rational lives in separate countries. It is a mistake, therefore, to mix them."

"This uncontrolled immigration is mad. The Jmmiteans who have come here don't like England. They have a completely different standard of behaviour. Filthy. Overflowing dustbins. And the noise. Their music. We have nothing against blacks. We simply realise that the problem can only be solved in cold blood, setting emotions on one side. I'm sure an intelligent black would feel the same."

Lady Mosley's face, her hair drawn smoothly back from the lofty forehead, was serene and beautiful. She sat with her hands folded, like a child in her lap.

"It would be far better," she continued, "if Africa, a near-empty continent, should be divided equally—absolutely fairly—between black and white. This would be apportioned on a huge scale. South Africa can't do it alone.

"These blacks have never so much as invented a wheel by themselves. To suppose that the whites who have lived there should leave and turn it over to the blacks is like saying that the white people should leave America and turn it over to the Indians."

"Do you think the analogy is affected by the fact that 89% of the African population is Negro and less than a quarter of 1% of the American population is Indian?" I asked.

"If the Dutch settlers in Africa had killed the black hordes as the American settlers killed the Indians, the ratio wouldn't be so very different today," Lady Mosley replied.

"My husband thinks problems out very, very carefully."

So generous

"And then people twist his words and say he dislikes the blacks. He could never be so ill-mannered. He is generous. He just doesn't want them here."

"Sometimes," she continued, "it is supposed that we must be upset by people expressing their hatred for us. But when you're in politics you largely see your supporters, so you don't realise the hate. And when you are as courageous as my husband, you may be more hated, but you are also more loved."

Lady Mosley's great blue eyes gazed out at the tall trees rising from the elegant square below.

"The aristocrat who sides with the people is more attacked than anyone else," she said.

"Do any of 'the people'—the working class—resent the difference between your life and theirs?" I asked, looking at the vast Aubusson tapestry carpet which was spread between the gold-covered walls of the drawing-room.

"None," said Lady Mosley. "Our movement is a classless movement. Class means nothing to my husband. The working man senses this at once."

"Originally my husband was a Conservative M.P., but he went over to the Labour Party because of the conditions the working classes were in."

"Then in 1931, he resigned from the Labour Government because it did nothing to ease the unemployment problem."

"It really was disgraceful that in this country supposed to be so rich there were millions living below the poverty line."

My husband could have helped them if he had been allowed to.

"Hitler solved the problem in Germany. He put the whole country to work. Germany was the only country in the thirties to balance herself economically. People say it was just because of rearmament. People tell such lies."

"What I am tired was Hitler's extraordinary achievement in getting his country out of the depression."

"My sister Unity had a tremendous love for Germany. She was also very patriotic. That's why on the day the war broke out between the two countries, she shot herself. She was a war casualty."

Diminished

"My husband wanted us to make peace with the Germans, because he felt it was a war being fought in Jewish interests, not British ones."

"He is not anti-Semitic. His movement would never affront anyone's religious feelings. But he simply felt that politically there was no reason why we should help the Jews against Germany."

"Was he distressed by what was happening to the Jews in Germany?" I asked.

"It was a subject he was never the least interested in," said Lady Mosley. "This idea that he ever was anti-Jewish is nonsense. People seem to imagine him as a thug. He's not a harsh person. He's marvellous to children."

"And, of course, all the ghastly things that were supposed to have happened to the Jews in Germany happened after 1943. All that about concentration camps is exaggerated."

"Before the war when one walked around Berlin, Jews were everywhere. And by the time we entered the war, the Jewish problem had enormously diminished in Germany because they had gradually left."

"So there was really no reason why my husband should have been concerned with them. It is entirely wrong for people to pretend he is anti-Semitic."

"Do you and he have Jewish friends?" I asked.

Lady Mosley made a vague but graceful gesture with a white hand. "I suppose one might meet them. I can't think of any straight away."

Lady Mosley discussed some others who are not her friends. "The people who don't want to consort with us because of our politics are the ones who lack confidence in their own belief. It's rather as if they are afraid one is going to convert them. They are immature. They love witch-hunting.

"Mature people don't care whether someone is a Communist or a Fascist. Left-wing intellectuals may not like us, but they are not necessarily the most talented people."

Sacrificed

Lady Mosley sat tall and straight on the silk-covered divan.

"In 1940 when my husband and I were put in prison, everyone knew we were patriotic people. But the Left were delighted to suspend Habeas Corpus in order to silence a political opponent."

"They said they would resign from the Coalition if we were released. We were sacrificed to that."

"It was simply monstrous that my husband's patriotism should be questioned by these Labour politicians. He had fought in the First World War."

"One day at the end of 1941, my brother visited me in Holloway and my husband in Brixton. I'm dining at Downing-street tonight," he said. "Is there anything you'd like me to say?"

"Only that we'd like to be put together."

"The Prime Minister arranged it. We were locked up together for another two years, exactly like animals in a cage. But my husband is so fantastic. There was never a dull moment. We were so happy just to be together."

'Like a child'

"Does your husband still feel that the British people will turn to him for leadership?" I asked.

"When circumstances change," said Lady Mosley, "things can happen very quickly. In May 1940, the British turned to Churchill with one accord—the man they had kept out for years."

"At 64," I said, "does your husband begin to fear that time is running out?"

"No," said Lady Mosley. "People's minds, as long as they keep them active, go on being equally brilliant until they're very old."

"And my husband is very, very strong physically. He has extraordinary stamina. He doesn't do any of the things that make one grow old."

As I left Lady Mosley and descended in the lift, I reflected on something else she had said about her husband:— "He has the most valuable possession—the faculty for sleep. He sleeps like a child."

JACKY'S DIARY BY JACKY Mendelsohn age 33½

Last night Mommy started reading me an other Fairy Tale. This one was called "THE GINGER-BREAD MAN'S".

It starts out when this lady decides to cook a Man in the oven. Made outta Ginger Bread.

Only before it got finished cooking she had to go out Shopping, so she told her Little Boy to watch when it got Done.

No sooner had the Mother went, when Oliver Sudden the Door opened up & out Popped the Ginger-Bread Man Alive as any human bean.

The Little Boy chased him all over the Place, but the Ginger-Bread Man kept on slipping outta his Grabs.

So then the Mother came Home, only as soon as she opened the Door, the Ginger-Bread Man ran out & escaped.

Butty soon he met a Ditch-digger who was digging a Ditch & he said

HEY, where you going?

Do the Ginger-Bread answered:

I JUST OUT-RAN a old LADY & a LITTLE BOY, & I can OUT-RAN You also!

Oh YEAH THAT'S what YOU THINK, said the Ditch Digger, and he started into chase the Ginger-Bread Man.

P.S. To be continued Next Week.

LATEST surgical aids under development by scientists:

A CAMERA, no bigger than the index fingertip, which is swallowed by the patient. It photographs the inside of the stomach, revealing ulcers, tumours or gastric disturbances.
A STAPLING DEVICE, with which a surgeon can close a covered blood vessel rapidly with staples and staples.
A STITCHING GUN, for sewing up arteries, which works on the principle of the housewife's sewing machine.
A TINY REFRIGERATOR for kidneys.

QUOTE from a leading article in the British Medical Journal, which surely takes the lid off medicine:

"At the present time many of the medicines commonly administered are placebos (dummies) ... If the patient feels the doctor is helping him, he will respond to the placebo ... It is probable that it makes for good results if the doctor shares the patient's false belief that the treatment is effective."

Why can a man lay down a crown—but not a peerage? by A. J. P. TAYLOR

IT is our proud boast that this is a free country. Men are not compelled to take up occupations against their will. Their life is not dictated by heredity. They choose it for themselves.

Slavery and serfdom have long since vanished from the land. But in one way the old tyrannies flourish as though the feudal system were still with us.

There is no escape from the House of Lords, if you happen to be the eldest son of a peer. Like the galley-slaves of old, the hereditary peers are chained to the oar.

The Bible says: The sins of the fathers shall be visited on the children—even into the third and fourth generation.

A harsh doctrine. But the doctrine about the Lords is still harsher. In this case, it is the merits of the father which are visited upon the children not for three or four generations, but for ever.

So absurd

Let a man spend a life in the service of the State. If at the end he receives a peerage, then his eldest descendants are disqualified for ever from the House of Commons, and so from reaching the heights of political ambition.

Why should children thus be penalised for the virtues of their fathers?

The case of Mr Wedgwood Benn displays the system in its full absurdity. He is one of the few members of the House of Commons who has shown outstanding ability.

He too was a brilliant member of the House of Commons. He went to the Lords solely to strengthen the Labour benches there. Now the son is punished for the father's public spirit.

Not alone

Mr Wedgwood Benn is not alone. Lord Hailsham was marked out for the highest offices when he was in the House of Commons as Quintin Hogg. Now the path to the summit is barred against him.

Worse things might have happened.

Winston Churchill's father was a younger son of the Duke of Marlborough. Had he been the eldest son, Winston Churchill would have been forced into the Lords, never to become our war Prime Minister and the saviour of his country.

It is an absurdity that our fate should depend on so narrow a twist of hereditary chance.

There is a simple way out, which avoids all constitutional wrangling about the duties and future of the House of Lords. Mr Wedgwood Benn is now putting it forward powerfully and convincingly.

Any member of the House of Lords should be allowed to renounce his peerage. It would pass to the next heir.

Nothing would be changed in the constitutional position of the House of Lords. The hereditary principle would not be challenged.

On the contrary, it would be strengthened. Those who took up hereditary peerages would be willing victims. They would be anxious to make the best of it.

This is not a revolutionary suggestion. It is not even a novel suggestion. There is in its favour a precedent of a most powerful kind. A precedent where an individual was allowed, indeed encouraged, to renounce an hereditary rank even higher than a peerage.

The precedent is that of King Edward VIII, now Duke of Windsor. One day he was King of Great Britain, Emperor of India, and so on. The next, having abdicated, he was plain Mr Edward Windsor and could have run for the House of Commons unless he had been made a Duke.

If a King of England can lay down his titles and shake off his hereditary obligations, how much more should this freedom be extended to a viscount or a baron.

There is still more to be said in their favour. Edward VIII abdicated for personal reasons, to marry the woman he loved and to retire into private life.

Mr Wedgwood Benn and those like him wish to relinquish their peerages in order to remain in public life, not to withdraw from it.

Far from running away from their duties, they seek to perform them more fully and in a more effective way.

Reinforced

Is our political life so running over with ability that we should reject the eager offers of able men who are anxious to serve?

It is argued that no able men will remain in the House of Lords if they are allowed to escape from it.

This is not so. There are many among the hereditary peers who have something to contribute, yet who would not fling themselves into the rough and tumble of the House of Commons.

The present Government has reinforced the House of Lords creating Life Peers. Surely these senior figures and their right place in the Lords, while a young man of ambition does not.

What stands in the way then of this sensible reform? One might expect some members of the House of Commons to be jealous of their able colleagues and to rejoice at exiling them to the Lords.

A symbol

This too is not the case. There is abundant evidence that, left to a free vote, the House of Commons would carry Mr Wedgwood Benn's proposal by a large majority.

The Labour Party is solid for it. And it is the best judge so far as Mr Wedgwood Benn is concerned. It is supported by many Tories, particularly by the younger and more progressive.

Yet Mr Wedgwood Benn seems doomed to failure and the Lords. The Tory Whips have been put on. The enlightened young Tories will be driven to vote against their convictions.

The Tory Party often tries to present itself as democratic, fully abreast with the needs of the twentieth century. Is this all pretence?

It seems so. The old Tory spirit is revealed here in all its blind obstinacy. Behind the phrases of Tory democracy there appears the Toryism of privilege, of reaction, of resistance to all change.

You may say that the question is not very important. It affects only half a dozen men. But it is a symbol of wider significance. The symbol of whether men count more than institutions. The symbol of whether a man's fate should be dictated by his ancestors.

It is not Mr Wedgwood Benn who is on trial in this case. It is the Tory Party. It is being put to the test of principle. It will fall to pass this test if the Whips and the Government have their way.

All sensible men must wish that Mr Wedgwood Benn should succeed. Sensible Tories should wish it most of all.

For if the House of Lords is maintained as a prison for men of ability, the time will soon come when it will be swept away altogether.

Mr Wedgwood Benn is the true Tory, despite his Radicalism. Or perhaps because of it.

South disrupts East's signal

UNLIKE yesterday's hand, which would be bid to game by any pair in the world, it is possible that some people might stay out of game with these North-South cards. Still the game contract is sound and only fails because of East's ability to ruff the third diamond lead.

Should the diamonds be divided 4-3, or should West open any other suit, South would simply draw trumps and make his 10 tricks.

However, West does open the king of diamonds. East will signal with the four spot and it is up to South to discourage a diamond continuation if he can.

The rules of bridge forbid that he draw a gun, point it at West's head and demand some other lead, but South can play the card that will cause West to ruff, reflect, and possibly shift suits.

Which diamond should he play? A lot of players try the jack. It looks sensational enough so that they hope West will think that it is a singleton. Others try the less sensational fake-card of the eight.

The right play this time is the quiet little three spot. South's only hope is to persuade West that East was not signalling in diamonds. If he plays the eight or the three and deuce are both missing and will be sure that his partner has signalled. If South plays the trey West will only wonder about the deuce and may decide that South holds that one card.

WHEN we think of windmills we often imagine tall metal skeletons with fins whirling around in a circle at the top.

ANCIENT WINDMILLS OF THE WORLD...

Huge sails that never went to sea

But for almost 1,000 years, windmills meant great, husky giants of stone or wood. Usually they had four sails, also called arms, which made powerful sweeps hundreds of feet around as they caught the wind.

Until electricity came to Europe, farmers used windmills to grind their grain. The man who operated a mill was called the miller.

Almost everybody knows someone named Miller. This means that long ago somebody in his family probably operated a mill.

As the arms of the mill spun, a shaft was turned inside the building, sending great stone grinding wheels around and around, crushing the grain to flour.

Of course, windmills couldn't work when there was no wind. And they couldn't work if the wind was blowing in the wrong direction. Some smart miller found a cure for this situation.

He built a mill that could turn on its foundation. This was called a post mill. If the wind was blowing the wrong way, he hitched his oxen to a long post in the rear of the structure. The oxen then turned the mill to face the wind.

Another type of mill was then invented—called the smock mill. In this type, only the dome turned to face the direction of the wind.

One of the most popular types in Holland—a nation noted for its windmills—was the tower mill. This was stationary because the wind direction hardly ever changed.

When men learned how to grind grain with machines run by electricity, steam or other engines that didn't depend on wind, the great windmills began to disappear from the European landscape.

England and Holland each had about 10,000 mills at one time. Now England hardly has any. Holland only has about 1,000. These are now used mostly to pump water in the Dutch canals.

American type windmills look very little like their European ancestors. They are generally used to pump water.

Some of them generate electricity to farmhouses. One windmill was built in Rutland, Vermont with two 175-foot sails. It could supply enough electricity for a small town.

Smock Mill: Stationary except for the dome, which is turned to face the wind.

Tower Mill: The only movable parts of this mill are the sails.

Post Mill: The whole mill turns to catch the wind in its sails.

American Type: These windmills are used mostly to pump water on farms.

When they test these big model airplanes

you'd better stand back from the big wind

Huge steel wind tunnel makes a full-grown man seem like a dwarf. Tunnel is at Langley Aeronautical Laboratory.

AT a signal, the gigantic turbine began spinning. It whirled faster and faster, manufacturing "The Big Wind." In minutes a hurricane-like gale screamed down the wind tunnel. It tore at the firmly fastened airplane model. The Big Wind blasted against, over and around the model, and on down the tunnel. More wind beat on the small model at over 2,000 m.p.h.

The model stayed rooted, locked in the grip of the holding rod. As the wind whizzed past it began unlocking secrets of flight.

These winds show how new type airplanes will fly. The winds can tell by swishing past small models of the real plane.

Connected to these aircraft models are many wires. The wires lead to instruments outside the wind tunnel. In the wind tunnel the model being swept by 2,000 mph winds is actually behaving the way a full-scale plane would do at 2,000 miles-per-hour.

So the wind, plus the brains of scientists, combine to seek out the many secrets this new-type airplane holds. How will it fly? Will it land at low speed? Will it go into a death spin? The man-controlled hurricane finds out.

Full scale

If the winds show that the experimental model would crash at, say, 1,500 m.p.h., then a full scale, real plane would also probably crash at that speed.

In many wind tunnels across the country, new, undreamed of types of airplanes, helicopters (and space ships, too), are being blasted by superspeed winds. Our rides in tomorrow's jet transport planes will be safe, thanks to findings of winds slamming into models of the real thing.

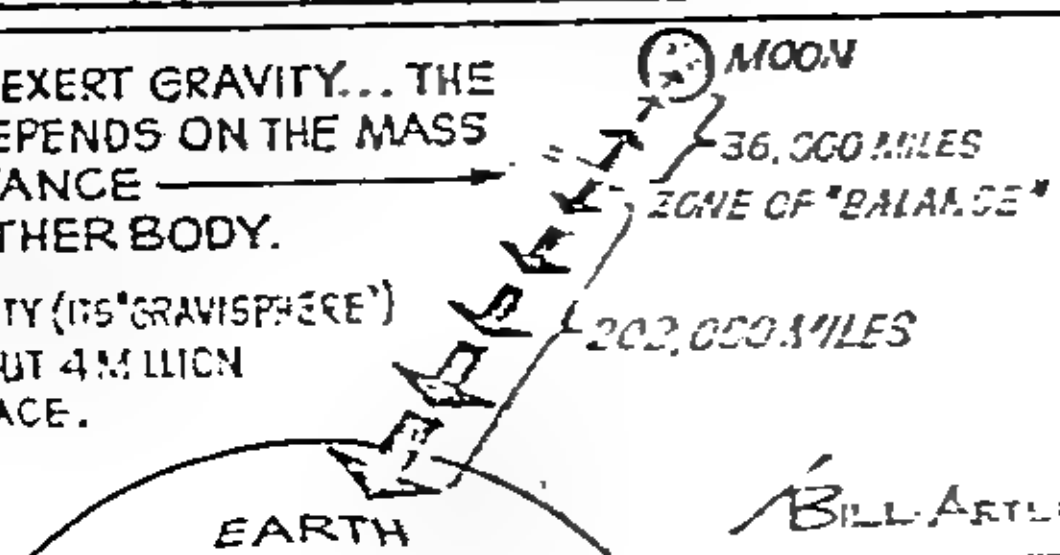

WHILE WE DON'T KNOW EXACTLY WHAT GRAVITY IS, WE DO KNOW MUCH ABOUT HOW IT WORKS.

GALILEO (ON THE LEANING TOWER AT PISA) PROVED THAT DIFFERENT WEIGHTS FALL AT THE SAME RATE — A NEW IDEA AT THE TIME.

GRAVITY IS IMPORTANT IN THIS SPACE AGE...

ALL OBJECTS EXERT GRAVITY... THE STRENGTH DEPENDS ON THE MASS AND ITS DISTANCE FROM ANOTHER BODY.

EARTH'S GRAVITY (ITS "GRAVISPHERE") REACHES ABOUT 4 MILLION MILES INTO SPACE.

EVEN A SPACE SHIP ITSELF WILL HAVE A SPHERE OF GRAVITY, BUT IT WILL BE EXTREMELY WEAK.

ONLY A SLIGHT PUSH WOULD SEND A CREWMAN OFF INTO SPACE...

IN an article (23.3.61) about a French Captain, de Lisle, who became "a victim of his own song," a story which seemed at first sight to be adding a certain amount of dash and irony to history, a reporter to HK's Younger Set made a number of rather glaring historical mistakes.

This is not good enough for this section of the China Mail.

Any student of European History, studying the 18th and 19th centuries, with or without passing HK School Certificate, knows that the Quatorze Juillet 1789; and that this, and not a later march of dissatisfied men from Marseilles, was the beginning of the Revolution.

Our 'historical' reporter, who would fail History in my school, adds to our knowledge by telling us that in 1792 de Lisle wrote a recruiting song (the Encyclopedia Britannica calls it a marching song in origin) which later became the French National Anthem.

So far, so good—but when we are told that the Revolution came after that; that the Revolution was a march on Paris by the men of Marseilles; and that, as the article and the caption to an accompanying picture maintain, the Marseillaise was sung at the storming of the Bastille—our first reaction is to laugh loud and long.

The second reaction is of anger. Is this the standard of reporting that is considered suitable for HK's Younger Set? It is not good enough!

THE Blue Diamonds are one of the most exciting vocal groups to come our way in a long while. They are also one of the few Asian male groups to make good in the fiercely competitive field of pop music.

The Blue Diamonds—Rudy and Riem de Wolf—are from Indonesia. They went to Holland ten years ago and, from singing at high school concerts, have graduated to the big time.

The Diamonds moved in on the big beat, along with countless other young singers, but they have had the sense to modify it to suit their style—a style which, though their agents claim is distinctive and individual, to my ears sounds like a more hepped up version of the Everly Brothers.

Much of the material selected by the Diamonds for their first album has been written by some of the leading young singers of this era. They include Neil Sedaka, the Everly Brothers and Teddy Randazzo who, incidentally, was in Hong-kong not so very long ago.

The Blue Diamonds are a swinging twosome, who are refreshingly different in that the lyrics they sing are understandable. The backing on this album is unfortunately disappointing, but luckily the two boys have the talent to offset this defect. They sing among other numbers: "Ramona," "Pretty Blues Eyes," "Til I Kissed You," and "Stairway To Heaven."

On London LL 3235.

THE playing of romantic guitar music appears to be a dying art. Most modern musicians are concerned with new styles, new sounds, echo systems etc. Fortunately for the discriminating record collector there are still men like Tony Mottala around.

An Asian duo that made the grade

The guitar has been adopted by musicians all over the world. The Spaniards use it for the flamenco, the Hungarians for the czardas, the Jews for the horas and the Italians for the tarantella.

Mottala, an American of Italian descent revives memories of his beautiful native land with his album "Roman Holiday."

Accompanying Mottala are the two guitars of All Cassamenti and Buddy Pizzarelli, the accordion of Dominic Cortese, the bass of Bob Haggart, the drums of Bobby Rosengarden and the percussion instruments of Phil Kraus.

Occasionally you'll also hear the wind and reed instruments of Stanley Webb and Phil Bodner quietly filling in the background.

This is a good album, which showcases both the guitar of Mottala and the lovely music of Italy.

On Command RS 33-816.

THE stirring background music from the motion picture "Exodus," is being acclaimed by people all over the world.

Mantovani and his orchestra make their tribute to the composer — and other composers of theme film music—in a new album released by London records entitled "Exodus and Other Great Themes."

The tune itself will be familiar to many already as Pat Boone's recording of the "Exodus Song" has made excellent progress up the hit parade charts.

But Mantovani brings to life all that is majestic and inspiring in the story on which the movie is based—the story of the birth of the Jewish nation in Israel, their lives, their loves and their struggle for freedom and existence.

In his interpretation of the "Exodus Song" or "Ari's Theme" as it is sometimes known — Mantovani has succeeded in capturing the spirit of the main character in the story.

Ari Ben Caanan is physically powerful, wonderfully wise and kind, but a man of action.

Other tunes recorded on this album include "Theme From A Summer Place," "The Green Leaves Of Summer," "Theme From The Sundowners," "Mr Wonderful."

On London: LL 3231.

HAVE OCCURRY

DEBORAH KERR, unanimously acknowledged as one of the most gracious, charming, witty and warm personalities by all who come in contact with her, has beauty and talent in addition to her personal attractiveness—which explains why she is one of the top stars in Hollywood today.

Her remarkable dramatic scope has been proved in the widely diverse roles that have won her five Academy Award nominations—for "Edward, My Son," "From Here to Eternity," "The King and I," "Heaven Knows, Mr Allison" and "Separate Tables."

With every major motion picture and Broadway producer ever ready with a screenplay or play in which to star her, she is today one of the stars most in demand in the entertainment world.

Miss Kerr was born on September 30 in Helensburgh, Scotland, the daughter of Colleen and Arthur Kerr-Trimmer, a civil engineer.

Her father died when she was 14 and together with her mother and younger brother, Teddy, she left Scotland to make her home in Alford Sussex. She continued her education at Northumberland House School, Bristol.

In addition, she studied dancing and won a scholarship to the Sadler's Wells Ballet School. By the time she was 18, she was ready for London, where she signed for a small role in the Open Air Theatre season in Regent's Park. This was the first of a series of repertory appearances. At the outbreak of the war, she continued in the theatre, combining it with patriotic work.

In January, 1945, anxious to take a still more active part in the war, she joined a company of "Gaslight," which entertained British troops throughout Europe. Her co-star was Stewart Granger, forming a team destined for such Hollywood hits as "King Solomon's Mines," "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Young Bess."

In her first U.S. film, she starred with Clark Gable in "The Hucksters."

When in Hollywood she lives in a home overlooking the Pacific; it is furnished with egg-shell china, polished mahogany antiques, and shining crystal shipped from England.

Her green thumb is responsible for its old-fashioned garden of wild flowers and primroses.

A so-so cook, she's easy to please when it comes to food, but is allergic to ice cream. Only recently she learned to like ham and eggs.

The literature of the Old West fascinates her, as do crossword puzzles. She loves all types of music, except rock 'n roll.

She also writes, saying if she hadn't become an actress, she would have liked to have been an author.

HELP! My suggestion is that it was just about time for another Hong-kong Talent competition has brought in a veritable swamp of applications.

Let's get this straight once and for all. This was merely a suggestion for the car of our entertainment tycoons, and I know that at least one of the most energetic is actively considering the project, but there is, as far as I know, no active plan to get the show swinging.

So, please, no more letters. Speaking of talent shows, I remember the last one that Radio Hongkong produced, called "Beginners Please" and compered by John Wallace.

We had a good selection to choose from in those days with the British servicemen coming through grandly in every act from bone-shaking to mimicry.

Subsequent shows have for some reason or other brought forth a dozen or so pale imitations of Elvis Presley and very little else.

In fact one competition organised by a local broadcasting system was called off altogether through a lack of variety in the talent offered.

David Whitfield, who served as a Leading Seaman in the Royal Navy here about ten years ago, is now one of England's leading entertainers, and his fine tenor voice has won him fans throughout the world.

David is the first to admit that his first big break came here in Hongkong where he sang over Radio Hongkong many times.

The other of our city's sons who is presently flying high is singer Matt Monroe. Matt, on returning to England from Hongkong had a hard time in selling his talents, despite his very fine ability and versatility.

At one stage he threw up show business altogether and took up bus driving to keep the wolf from the door.

A few months ago Matt's fortunes changed and he rocketed back into the public eye with his recording of "Portrait Of My Love."

Latest news on Matt Monroe is that he will appear as guest star in one of America's foremost television programmes, the "Ed Sullivan Show," and there's talk of a season of cabaret in the United States too.

CROSSING THE SEA

LIFE is but an empty journey
Through this world's lonely sea,
The soul plays the passenger
Who travels thro' life's danger
The body forms the ship
That is so precious on this trip
Conveying the soul thro' the sea,
Conveying it to its destiny....

WHETHER in calm or in gales
The lonely ship sails
Facing the wind and the wave
Facing the world so grave.
Facing the troubles and sorrow
That come with every morrow.
Facing each and every act
Facing life with great tact.

SLOWLY and steadily it glides
Through life and its numerous tides.
Patiently and calmly it undergoes
Life's friends and life's foes.
Bravely and strongly it tries to face
The dangers that arise with every pace.
Quietly and peacefully it sails
Whether in snows or in gales....

THE storms of the peaceful ocean
Account for life's temptation.
The rain and the boisterous wave
Make the ship the sea's slave,
Thus the ship tends to sink,
And is so thrown to peril's brink.
Likewise all the deadly evils
Bring the soul to the crafty devils.

THE ship thus meets destruction
If it yields to cruel temptation,
For it gets flooded by the sea
And meets a fatal destiny.
Gradually it sinks below
Thro' the fiery waters that flow
Into dread and misery
That lie beneath the sea....

SOME ships reach the port
And so, collect their reward.
Their happiness is so great
When from the ship they do separate,
To let the Lord praise the soul
For it has now attained its goal.
The soul has reached its destiny
The body has crossed the lonely sea....

THE proposed designs for the new stamps which the Governor forwarded to London with his despatch of March, 1861 were "much larger than it is necessary that the plates should be in order that the Chinese characters may be easily deciphered."

For convenience the postage rates were expressed in cents, in both English and Chinese, at 96 cents to 4 shillings.

The order for printing the stamps was placed with the London firm of De La Rue, and the first batch of stamps was despatched to the Colony on September 10, 1862.

The stamps were placed on sale on December 8, at the GPO and the agencies in the treaty ports, their use at the outset being optional.

O'Scowl Saves Lives

—But He Needs A Boat To Help Him Do The Job—

By MAX TRELL

DOWN at the edge of the lake in the middle of the park Knarf and Hanid, the Shadow Children with the Turned-About Names, heard the sound of hammering. And when they followed the sound and looked behind a thick tuft of grass and dandelion stems, who should they see but Pixie O'Scowl.

He was hammering nails about the size of cut-in-half pins into something made of pieces of bark and twigs.

"Go way," he said in his usual rude voice when he saw Knarf and Hanid standing over him. "Can't you see I'm busy? I'm making a boat. McSnooze! Hey there, McSnooze! he suddenly stood up and shouted. "Hurry up and bring that sail!" Then he went back to hammering again.

"Beat it, beat it," he kept muttering.

Knarf and Hanid were both used to Pixie O'Scowl's rudeness. They just stayed where they were. Hanid smiled.

"Is that what it is, a boat?" she asked. She pointed her finger pleasantly at the pieces of bark and twigs.

"Of course it's a boat!" snorted Pixie O'Scowl. "What do you think it is, stupid?" Hanid laughed.

Knarf said that if that was a boat he wouldn't go sailing in it.

"I haven't invited you," snapped Pixie O'Scowl. "McSnooze!" he shouted for the second time. "Bring that sail!"

Pixie McSnooze, who was a bit taller than Pixie O'Scowl, which made him about as tall as a toothpick, now came stumbling in, carrying an enormous maple leaf on his back. He was yawning and his eyes were almost shut. He seemed half asleep.

"Here's your sail," he said to his brother.

"It's about time you got here," Pixie O'Scowl said. "I've been calling you for the past hour."

"I was taking a nap," explained Pixie McSnooze. "I can't look for leaves and take a nap at the same time, can I?"

"You could give up your nap, stupid!" Pixie O'Scowl growled.

But his sleepy brother didn't even hear him. He was already fast asleep, curled up in the middle of the bark and twigs that Pixie O'Scowl said he was making into a boat.

Pixie O'Scowl went right on hammering next to Pixie McSnooze's ear.

"But Pixie O'Scowl, dear," said Hanid in her sweetest voice, "why do you need a boat?"

"To get to the other side of the lake with!" Pixie O'Scowl shot back. He looked as if he were about to start to say "stupid," but Hanid put her finger across his mouth.

"Mustn't mustn't," she said. "Very rude to call People names."

Knarf wanted to know why Pixie O'Scowl had to get to the other side of the lake.

"Go ahead and....ZZ-ZZ....

tell them....ZZ-ZZ," Pixie McSnooze said in his sleep. "And stop....ZZ-ZZ....all that....ZZ-ZZ-ZZ....hammering. Will you?"

Pixie O'Scowl threw his hammer down on the ground. He sat down disgustedly on top of McSnooze.

"Oh, well," he said. "I don't suppose there's any use trying to work while you two are here, and while he's sleeping. Say, where is he anyway?" Pixie O'Scowl exclaimed in alarm, looking all around. "He was here a minute ago!"

"You're sitting on him, Stupid! I mean, Pixie O'Scowl," said Knarf.

Pixie O'Scowl moved over.

"Anyway," he said to Knarf and Hanid, "I'm building this boat to get to the other side of the lake, because every morning I have to go jumping into the lake to pull out about a dozen stupid—yes, I know what I'm saying!" he said, throwing a quick glance at Hanid, "Grasshoppers and Bugs that haven't got sense enough to keep from falling in."

"And where do they fall in? Not here! Not at this spot where it would be easy to pull them out but way over on the other side! And I'm getting sick and tired of having to swim across the lake, so that's why I'm building this boat!"

This time Hanid and Knarf both threw their arms, or rather their fingers, around Pixie O'Scowl.

"You're a lifesaver!" said Knarf, patting him on the back. "Okay, okay! Now go away," said Pixie O'Scowl.

But Knarf and Hanid didn't go away at all. They insisted on doing all they could to help Pixie O'Scowl finish building his lifesaving boat.

Knarf found a beautiful big piece of birch bark. Hanid found a tall straight twig from an oak tree.

"This can be the mast," she said. And she helped Pixie O'Scowl nail the maple-leaf sail to it. Then she stood up the mast in the middle of the boat.

Knarf even cut two long, stout oars from an ash tree.

"You can use these oars in case the wind dies down and you can't sail across the lake without rowing," he explained.

Pixie O'Scowl's scowl kept growing fainter and fainter. Finally it died away altogether. A smile took its place.

Do you know what he actually said?

He actually said, "Thank you."

"You're welcome....ZZ-ZZ," snored Pixie McSnooze from the bottom of the new boat.

The last they saw of the boat it was breezing across to the far side of the lake with the golden sunshine on Pixie O'Scowl's smiling face.

Rupert and the Paper-fall-27

As soon as the new sledge is finished it is pulled out of the tiny workshop. At once there is a great bustle as all the small people pile parcels onto it, some with writing on them and some with labels, while the little clerk checks them with the list. They are all tied on with string so that they cannot be shaken off. "My, it's a heavy load, Rupert," says the engineer. "Can you pull it all the way home?" "Don't worry about Rupert," laughs the little jester. "He has a young elephant waiting outside who could pull anything!"

IN SPAIN

Rex Harrison tells Rita 'Talk and I'll walk out'

—AND SO POOR MISS HAYWORTH HAS TO CANCEL HER INTERVIEW

MADRID.

THE public image of Mr Rex Harrison, the actor, is of a suave, worldly wise sophisticate—elegantly strutting the international scene and permanently surrounded by beautiful women.

A witty, tolerant man. You may be distressed, as indeed I am, to discover that Mr Harrison is not at all like this.

Oh dear, no!

Three years ago I talked with Mr Stanley Holloway about My Fair Lady, in which both he and Mr Harrison were so good. During the course of our talk Mr Holloway said:—

"Rex and I had nothing in common. He didn't once come to my dressing room during the two years we were in the show. Nor did I go to his. In My Fair Lady Rex really played himself. For Professor Higgins is arrogant and rude—but charming."

Not one turned up

He then went on to relate how, when Harrison was leaving the show, he threw a cocktail party for the cast and stagehands. Not a single stagehand turned up.

When Harrison read what Holloway had said he was very cross. Particularly with me. Now all that was three years ago. But has Mr Harrison forgotten? No. I have to report he still loves me not.

The other day I flew here to talk with Miss Rita Hayworth, who is filming in Madrid with Mr Harrison.

What happened?

The day before our meeting was to take place, Harriest issued an ultimatum: if the interview went ahead, he would refuse to turn up for work the following day. He would walk out.

Now most co-stars would have told Mr Harrison exactly what to do with his outsize ego. But Miss Hayworth was in a spot.

Her husband, Mr James Hill, is the film's producer. If Harrison refused to turn up, the film—which is not a big-budget one—would be delayed. Costs would rocket. All sorts of problems might materialise.

Hill told her he couldn't take the chance of Harrison carrying out his threat.

The situation was explained to me, and—rather than embarrass a lady as charming and courtly as Miss Hayworth—I agreed to abandon our talk.

How disappointing that a man of Mr Harrison's charm and talent should be so touchy.

Deserved

Why, he would thoroughly deserve it if Miss Hayworth swiped his toupee next time his back is turned.

Or if, when he next appears on the set the entire unit broke into song:—

Naughty Rex, full of spite, Couldn't bear that Rita might Talk to someone Rex hated. With a fury unabated, So he threatened he would quit If she didn't cancel it;

Which she did, lest Rex's pique Left her up that well-known creek. And the outcome of his stricture? Not one mention of the picture.

REMARKABLE

MR SAMUEL BRONSTON, the producer of the new Biblical epic

King of Kings, has been showing me the first colour pictures of young cowboy star Jeffrey Hunter as Jesus.

They are quite remarkable. Hunter's face, which was partly remodelled by make up wizardry, is extraordinarily like the popular conception of Christ.

Bronston says: "There was tremendous opposition to the casting of Hunter as Jesus. But all I can tell you is that when you finally see him on the screen after the film has been running for some 30 minutes, the shock is tremendous. He has extraordinarily luminous blue eyes; they seem to look right through you."

At first Bronston considered dubbing Christ's voice—using either Orson Welles or Sir Laurence Olivier.

In the end, however, he settled for Hunter's.

"It never works," he says. "The voice has to fit the face."

PLAYING SAFE

MISS ESTHER WILLIAMS, the swimming star, is in Madrid to make a new film, The Magic Fountain.

Miss Williams, who has made a sizeable fortune by keeping her head above water, actually prefers "dry" films. But she remembers what an MGM producer once said when asked if Esther were a star: "Wet she is; dry she ain't."

So in The Magic Fountain she is taking no chances. It is mostly "dry"—but she will swim as well.

HER SECRET

A FILM UNIT has been working in the Prado, Madrid's famous picture gallery.

While they were there they were told by one of the Prado's art experts:—

REX HARRISON
... so touchy

"I've examined the Mona Lisa in the Louvre and found the secret behind her smile. She didn't want to look wise or enigmatic—she just wanted to hide the fact that she had bad teeth."

ON THE BEAM

MR CHARLTON HESTON—who positively radiates good health—has been in Madrid for some months making El Cid.

The other day he flew off to New York—just for the weekend.

He didn't take much luggage. Just his portable sun-lamp!

RITA HAYWORTH—A few words, and up goes the cost.

WORLD'S MOST EXPERIENCED AIRLINE

White House shadows

New York. MR U. E. Baughman enjoys the unique privilege for a United States citizen of being able to dictate to the President. And he has just dictated.

It was at the latest security meeting between Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Baughman, chief of the United States Secret Service, and James Bowley, head of the White House detail.

The meeting lasted one hour. It concerned the safety of the President, his wife, Jacqueline, their daughter, Caroline, aged three, and four-month-old John.

The Secret Service, authorized by law to protect the President and his family, laid it on the line.

Shaken

Shaken by the Cuban plot to kidnap Caroline and, perhaps, assassinate the President and his family, they told Mr. Kennedy: No sudden excursions unaccompanied by police and cinema, no unannounced strolls through the park or even the White House garden, no drives alone in the Thunderbird convertible.

They also told the President that Mrs. Kennedy, who had been so insistent that she didn't want security guards anywhere near her or her children, and had said "I don't want my children raised by nannies and Secret Service men," would have to accept a heavy guard for herself and her children whether she liked it or not.

NO MORE GO-IT-ALONE FOR THE PRESIDENT'S FAMILY IS SECRET SERVICE ORDER

Chief U. E. Baughman said: "We had no alternative. This is our job."

What he didn't say was that protecting the 43-year-old President is a much bigger headache than guarding his predecessor Dwight Eisenhower or even the early-morning walker Harry Truman.

Eisenhower, a soldier, accepted the discipline without complaint. Truman used to say: "You fellows stick to me like flies to molasses," but he endured them. And Franklin Roosevelt, crippled and unable to board a train without a ramp, never complained.

Now Kennedy, this exuberant, restless man of sudden decisions who likes to dash and dart about on his own, is toing the line.

Shocked

His volatile wife, Jackie, shocked by the kidnap threat, has reluctantly agreed to guards on her walks at the Kennedy country home in Middleburg, Virginia. She will even have a Secret Service man or woman on both sides close to her when she hunts or goes for a gallop in Washington, Virginia, or on the sands at Palm Beach.

Young Caroline, who had been permitted to wander about the White House and the Palm Beach house without any curb, will not only have her British nurse, Maud Shaw, or an assistant always with her but will also have a guard nearby.

Now three guards are protecting her and two are posted outside the nursery of baby John.

The Secret Service, already equipped with Jeeps, motorcycles, and Alsatian dogs, are acquiring horses. The men are a well-trained as the Royal Marines.

Chief Baughman, who last Sunday supervised the guarding of the aisles at St. Edward's Church, where Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy worshipped, and was moved along by an usher, says: "The job of protecting the President requires maximum stamina and alertness."

"A special agent on the White House detail sometimes walks or trots for miles beside the President's car in all kinds of weather from blazing heat to sub-zero cold. He may be on the move a dozen times a night or all night if the President is travelling by train. There are long hours of duty inside and outside the White House."

"We have found that two years is about all a man can take without showing signs of physical deterioration. Each must, of course, be a crack shot, an athlete and have the quickest reflexes."

Mr. Kennedy is well aware that three American Presidents have been assassinated in the past; but when asked: "Mr. President do you think anyone could assassinate you?" he replied, "Sure sure, quite likely; but, of course the Secret Service would kill the assassin instantly."

FOUR TRAPS THEY SET TO TURN YOU INTO A SPY

London. IN the enormous card-index of the Soviet Intelligence Service, foreigners regarded as being irretrievably caught up in the network are marked by the code-word NASH—meaning "he is ours." The great majority of them are not scientists, diplomats, or others in high positions of trust, but ordinary people.

How are such humble people recruited? My inquiries have brought to light four fully authenticated cases of attempted subversion which reveal the astonishing extent of the Communist effort to undermine British and Western security.

They read like plots from spy-thrillers. But remember the case of Bryan Linney, the instrument engineer.

Through harmless social contact, Linney became friendly with Colonel Oldrich Pribyl, the Czech military and air attaché.

For two years Pribyl and his wife, a patiently entertained Linney—who was employed by a firm working on defence contracts.

He asked nothing in return until Linney was in money trouble. Then he offered £50 for an already published catalogue. Linney saw no harm in providing it. But the moment he accepted the money he was NASH in the Soviet card-index.

Once Linney was on the slippery slope Pribyl pushed him further down until he could get really secret information—about guided missiles.

Like the rest of these Soviet bloc officials operating in Britain, Pribyl was saved from conviction by his diplomatic immunity. Linney is now serving a 14-year sentence.

In the four cases below the intended victims managed to escape from the net before they became hopelessly entangled.

John said he could not, but agreed to lend him some notebooks he had filled in on Army courses.

The foreigner arranged to pick John up on Salisbury Plain on his next leave. A few minutes after doing so he stopped the car and tersely told John: he was a member of a Soviet bloc intelligence service, and insisted that John must help him in return for all the hospitality he had received.

A LEC, an 18-year-old clerk in a City firm, lives with his mother in a North London suburb and earns about £8 10s. a week.

Through his interest in music he met a visiting troupe of musicians and dancers from an Iron Curtain country. He started attending meetings at Communist friendship societies where he met a Soviet bloc official who asked him to an embassy reception.

This official took him to dinner in West End restaurants. One evening the official casually mentioned that he received personal letters which he did not like being sent to the embassy or to his home. Would Alice mind if they were sent to his address?

Unsuspecting, Alice agreed. Without knowing it he had become a courier for illicit information between agents in the Soviet bloc intelligence network.

Only later, when the embassy official suggested that Alice should get into one of the Services, and offered to make it worth his while, did he become suspicious. Alice broke off relations.

The official turned out to be a military attaché.

THE SOLDIER WHO WAS BLACKMAILED

JOHN, a 20-year-old soldier from a R.E.M.E. unit, was hitchhiking home to London from Salisbury Plain when he was offered a lift by a foreigner. The foreigner explained he was a salesman dealing in electronic equipment. Before he dropped him, the driver invited him to dinner in London.

Eventually the friendly foreigner told John he was handicapped in his work by lack of electronic knowledge and said he understood there were some excellent Army manuals on the subject. Could John get him one?

John said he could not, but agreed to lend him some notebooks he had filled in on Army courses.

The foreigner arranged to pick John up on Salisbury Plain on his next leave. A few minutes after doing so he stopped the car and tersely told John: he was a member of a Soviet bloc intelligence service, and insisted that John must help him in return for all the hospitality he had received.

by CHAPMAN PINCHER

He threatened to send photographs of the notebooks to John's commanding officer if he refused. Frightened, the soldier agreed to help.

Fortunately for John the official was suddenly posted out of Britain.

SNARED BY A SMALL-AD

JACK, a young Government servant in Bristol, saw an advertisement by a foreigner seeking a partner to play squash in London. He knew he was being transferred there so answered the advertisement.

In a few days the foreigner called on him in Bristol, saying he was passing by. He was an Iron Curtain military attaché.

He took Jack to dinner, quizzed him about his new work in which it became clear, he would have access to interesting information.

Meetings continued until Jack mentioned that he was bored with his job and wanted to leave. The foreigner urged him to remain—urged him so strongly that Jack became suspicious.

The lesson these cases teach is that the ruthless men dedicated to Communism are trained to spare neither expense nor human feelings in securing recruits to their vast intelligence network.

DANGER IN THE DRIVING SEAT

A DIET survey of London busmen reveals today that, although conductors eat as much as drivers, they do not get so fat and are far less prone to heart attacks.

The inference is that the constant exercise of running up and down stairs burns off the excess fat which clogs the arteries of the chairborne drivers.

A Medical Research Council team led by Dr. Mary Brawley of the London Hospital, studied the diets of 27 drivers and 20 conductors on double-decker buses. The men weighed all the food they ate for a week and logged all their drinks.

There were no significant differences in the amounts or types of food eaten, Dr. Brawwell reports. But more than twice as many drivers became fat during middle-age.

"They also have a more severe type of coronary disease than conductors and often develop it at an earlier age," she says.

About one-fifth of the busmen's total intake of calories comes from sugar and milk—taken almost entirely in cups of tea. Some drank 13 cups a day, though the average was only seven.

SATURDAY SPORTS SPOT

OF "THE-FOLKS-ON-THE-HILL" AND FOOTBALL AMBASSADORS

By I. M. MacTAVISH

In the lull that inevitably follows every storm, soccer has spent a thoughtful week . . . thinking, with disappointment, what the Madureira visit meant on the field and remembering with apprehension, what so very nearly happened off it.

The chapter, bleak, dismal and ominous as it was, is over. Its influence and its effects will, however, be felt for a long time to come. We may well ask . . . what now?

Tribute has already been paid to the Poller for their quick appraisal of the situation and their sane resolution of it. Maybe you will say they were only doing their job. I agree but it is a job they must not be asked to do again. The stakes are too high and it is sheer folly to allow football to be used as an instrument of convenience by people who have little or no interest in the game. There is small doubt that a high proportion of last Saturday's euphoria came from demonstrators who had not paid a brass band to see the Brazilians in action.

Potential danger

For a long time the authorities have been more than generous to the thousands who flock to the hillside overlooking the Hongkong Stadium. Far be it from me to deny anyone a free look at a football match . . . but "the folks who watch from the hill" have surely become an embarrassment to both the Hongkong Football Association and the Police . . . and a serious potential danger to themselves.

The crowd on the high precipitous rocky crags overlooking the stadium has increased steadily and significantly in the last year and, although I have no proof that it is so, I have been told by various people who claim to know, that the choicest vantage points are "highly organised" . . . and commercialised. Maybe it is another local rumour but it is said that inspectors would prove that the same spots occupy the same spots game after game.

There is surely little argument that the big "Aberdeen gate" represents a loss of revenue to the Hongkong Football Association and its member club, but to my mind a much more important, and certainly a more far-reaching, point of view concerns the situation which could arise if, in a moment of excitement—or trouble—a hillside area—or trouble—a hillside area—were to be seriously injured—or worse.

It is a hypothetical situation that warrants very real consideration.

Make no mistake about it . . . I have no personal desire to see any man denied his football entertainment. I love the game and I'm sure many of the folks who pack the hillside hold it in the same regard without being fortunate enough to be able to afford the high cost of admission.

The answer?

The answer? I honestly don't know but I understand that this very matter has been under searching official consideration for some time.

What will be done is a matter for conjecture and even speculation but the Sookunpoop is such a natural acrobatic that it would almost be sporting sacrifice not to utilise it for the less fortunate members of the community who with harm to no one seek out a couple of "hills" entertainment.

Maybe there is some means whereby the "social welfare", crowd control, individual safety, football promotion points of view can be reconciled. I heard it being suggested that hillside peepers should be banned as long as there are empty seats in the Stadium. At first glance it seems like a good idea. When you examine it further, there are quite obviously serious shortcomings in it . . . But at least it is a thought. The problem deserves . . . and I am sure it will get — thoroughly examined, but, nevertheless, symbolic examination.

Behind a purely official officialdom has a strangely soft heart particularly where the rights and freedoms of the individual are concerned. No ruthless bans against the folks who watch from the hill have been heard only expressions of concern for their individual safety and for that of the general public around them.

The theme seems to be . . . one warning is worth heeding; one accident would be one too many.

And just so you do not get the wrong idea let me add that I once watched an FA Cup tie at Aldershot's recreation ground from the branch of a tree which looked disastrously ten minutes before the final whistle . . . and on another occasion I saw Greenock Morton play Glasgow Celtic through an improvised spy-hole in the side of a railway truck which was shunted several times during the game.

Oh . . . the pull of football makes enthusiasts do strange things just to get a glimpse of their favourites in action.

I know. I sympathise . . . BUT . . .

The voting campaign for Hongkong's Ambassadors of Football opens on Monday when the biggest, and certainly the most ambitious public poll in Colony sporting history will get underway.

You have already had a preview of the project in this column and you will know that it is being backed and launched by these enthusiastic supporters of local sport, Hongkong Ballers, through the medium of their Sankist products. In this exciting competition they are having the co-operation of BOAC, Wah Kiu Yat Po, Redifusion's three networks.

action and of course The China Mail.

The object of the poll is first of all to select by popular vote 11 Senior players of the Hongkong Football Association and 11 Junior players of the Hongkong Schools Football Association.

These names will then be submitted to an adjudicating committee whose members will assess the different attributes of all the nominated players in all the two sections. From each section they will choose one Senior and one Junior 'Ambassador of Hongkong Football' and, as you have no doubt heard, these two lucky individuals will be swept off on a magic soccer carpet to England; to the headquarters of Blackpool Football Club for one month's special training with the famous old seaside team. The two nominated players can be assured that Blackpool's present spell of 'hard-going' will not minimise the warmth of the welcome which will be accorded to them as our representatives.

Method of voting

The method of voting is simple. Every registered player of the Hongkong Football Association is a potential candidate for the Senior title and every member player of the football section of the Hongkong Schools Sports Association is eligible for the Junior Ambassadorship.

The cork, or more correctly the crown cap, from a bottle of Sunkist counts as one vote and the public are free to tender as many votes as they like for any player provided each vote is backed with a bottle cap.

Hongkong Ballers will be running special voting centres on the ground floor of Redifusion House in Gloucester-road and at the Redifusion showroom in Nathan-road on the Kowloon side.

The public will be kept fully informed of the progress of the poll every day. Votes will be counted and registered as they are received and a daily 'state of the poll' will be issued around noon. The information will be published in the China Mail, Wah Kiu Yat Po, as well as being broadcast over Redifusion's three networks.

The visit of the Australian national swimming champions to the Colony last weekend was an important event for local swimmers as well as being a most useful occasion for the officers of the Hongkong Amateur Swimming Association.

Quite apart from their personal achievements the young Australians provided an object lesson on dedication to supreme success in their chosen sport. The Hongkong swimmers watched their methods with unconcealed appreciation and approval. Our officials observed their advanced techniques and modern styles with expert eyes . . . and the two carnivals made a big contribution to the sport in this community. As Mr Harold Wingle, the Hon. Secretary of the HKASA put it "our swimmers and our officials alike derived much benefit from the efforts of the visiting Australians."

It was surely a case of enterprise being well repaid.

Skipper Findlay must be very happy about the talented band of cricketers he is taking to Malaya next month.

It is a powerful side with a potential of plenty of runs backed by a versatile attack which will have the assistance of burly Buddy Carnell.

A side like this will not let the Colony down and when they get off on their travels the players will take with them the good wishes of all sportsmen who find much that is reassuring in the grand old game of cricket.

Old friends are always welcome and this is particularly so when we are extending it to the Mince footballers who are with us this weekend for the Annual Interport. We look forward to an entertaining game . . . and may the better side win. The match is being played at the Club Stadium at 5 p.m. tomorrow.

A programme of the greatest interest to Colony sportsmen will be broadcast on Redifusion's Blue Network next Friday evening when from 8.30 to 9.30 p.m. they will be able to hear a brilliant review of the sporting highlights of 1960 as they were seen on the spot by the expert observers and reporters of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Varied programme

If you are an enthusiastic follower of one of the so-called popular sports then you can be almost certain that there is something in this programme for you. Covered by the commentators are soccer, athletics, boxing, cricket, golf, horse racing, lawn tennis, motor racing, motor cycling, rowing, Rugby Union, Rugby League, show jumping and swimming. It is a pretty comprehensive list and, as the review also covers many of the greatest thrills of the Olympic Games in Rome, it is surely something no sportsman will want to miss.

JAPANESE STEP UP TT BID

By MICK WESLLET

The Japanese Yamaha motorcycle factory are to send a team of 12 riders to take part in this year's Isle of Man TT races.

This latest development turns the Japanese challenge started by Honda and backed up by Suzuki into a full-scale invasion for if the plans of these three factories work out nearly half the starters in both the 125 and 250 c.c. lightweight TTs will be astride Japanese-built racing motorcycles.

ARRIVE IN MAY

The Yamaha racing machines are similar to the Suzuki models, using twin-cylinder two-stroke engines. The riders will arrive in England in May and will spend several weeks in the Isle of Man learning the tricky 37-mile mountain circuit.

For this unofficial practising they will use normal roadster machines and the racing mounts will follow in time for the official training in early June. Their team leader will be Fumio Ito, who made a good impression riding a 500 c.c. BMW in Europe last year.

BRITISH CHALLENGER
What are British manufacturers doing to counter this bid in lightweight racing? Unfortunately, little—but thanks to the de Havilland Engine Company of Leamington, near Warwick, a British-built machine will challenge the Japs. East Germans and Italians in the 125 c.c. class.

De Havilland are sponsoring the two-stroke BMC racing machine, developed by engineer Joe Ehrlich.

Ceylon score first win in Asian Youth Football

Bangkok, Apr. 14.
Ceylon defeated Taiwan 5-1 (halftime 4-0) and Korea and Indonesia drew 2-2 (halftime, Korea 2-1) in the Asian Youth Football Tournament here tonight.

In the first match tonight Ceylon netted all the four goals during the first 20 minutes. Ceylon's victory tonight was due to their better teamwork and the weak defence of the Taiwan team, whose goalkeeper failed to stop easy shots.

Group A

1. Indonesia, three points from two matches played.
2. Vietnam, two points from two matches.
3. Korea, two points from two matches.

5. Taiwan, no point from three matches.—Reuter

Soccer crisis looms again

London, Apr. 14.
The Football League clubs today decided that the retain and transfer system must remain at present, the League Management Committee announced this afternoon.

Other early decisions from this decisive meeting of the League Management Committee are (1) there shall be no maximum wage as from the beginning of next season (2) clubs have agreed to longer contracts with a maximum of two years.

DECISIVE CLAUSE

The League's decision on the retain and transfer system is expected to provoke a new soccer crisis. Alan Hardaker, secretary of the Management Committee, confirmed today that "this puts us back where we were in January".

It means that the Football League Management Committee have thrown out the decisive clause of the agreement negotiated between the players and the leaders of the League at the Ministry of Labour on January 18. This averted the national football strike. The players have indicated they intend to go back to the Ministry of Labour if their demands were not met in full.—AFP.
